Vain is the force of man, and heav'n's as vain,
To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden.

4. To subdue; to conquer beyond resistance.

They use them to plague their enemies, or to oppress and crush some of their own too stubborn freeholders. Spenser on Ireland.

Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in 't it had; for
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword. Shakespeare.

This art
Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength, Defeating sin and death, his two main arms. Milton.

What can that man fear, who takes care to please a Being that is so able to crush all his adversaries? a Being that can divert any misfortune from befalling him, or turn any such misfortune to his advantage. Addison's Guardian.

- To CRUSH. v. n. To be condensed; to come in a close body.

CRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A collision; the act of rushing together.

Thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the rage of worlds. Johnson's Cato.

CRUST. n. f. [crusta, Latin.]

1. Any shell, or external coat, by which any body is enveloped.

I have known the statue of an emperor quite had under a crust of dross. Addison.

2. An incrustation; collection of matter into a hard body.

Were the river a confusion of never so many different bodies, if they had been all actually dissolved, they would at least have formed one continued crust; as we see the scum of metals always gathers into a solid piece. Addison.

The viscous crust stops the entry of the chyle into the lacteals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The case of a pie, made of meal, and baked.

He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear of catching cold: when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side, learning how to season it, or put it in crust. Addison's Spectator.

4. The outer hard part of bread.

Th' impenetrable crust thy teeth defies,
And perished with age, securely lies. Dryden.

5. A waste piece of bread.

Y' are liberal now; but when your turn is sped,
You'll wish me choak'd with every crust of bread. Dryden.
Men will do tricks, like dogs, for crusts. Leitch's

To CRUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To envelop; to cover with a hard case.

Why gave you me a monarch's look,
And crush'd it with base plebeian clay? Dryden.
Nor is it improbable but that, in process of time, the whole surface of it may be crushed over, as the islands enlarge themselves, and the banks close in upon them. Addison on Italy.

C R Y

And now their legs, and breasts, and bodies flow'd Crush'd with bark, and hard'ning into wood. Addison.

In some, who have run up to men without education, we may observe many great qualities darkened and eclipsed; their minds are crush'd over, like diamonds in the rock. Fulton.

2. To foul with concretions.

If your master bath many musty, or very foul and crush'd bottles, let those be the first you truck at the alehouse. Swift.

To CRUST. v. n. To gather or contract a crust; to gain a hard covering.

I contented myself with a plaster upon the place that was burnt, which crush'd and healed in very few days. Temple.

CRUSTA'CEOUS. adj. [from crusta, Lat.]

Shelly, with joints; not testaceous; not with one continued uninterrupted shell. Lobster is crustaceous, oyster testaceous.

It is true that there are some shells, such as those of lobsters, crabs, and others of crustaceous kinds, that are very rarely found at land. Woodward's Natural History.

CRUSTA'CEOUSNESS. n. f. [from crustaceous.] The quality of having jointed shells.

CRUSTILY. adv. [from crusty.] Peevishly;
snappishly; harshly.

CRUSTINESS, n. f. [from crusty.]

1. The quality of a crust.

2. Peevishness; moroseness.

CRUSTY. adj. [from crust.]

1. Covered with a crust.

The egg itself deserves our notice; its parts within, and its crust without, are admirably well fitted for the business of incubation. Darwin's Phlog. Theor.

2. Sturdy; morose; snappish; a low word.

CRUTCH. n. f. [crocia, Italian; croce,
French; cruck, German.]

1. A support used by cripples.

Ah, thus King Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakespeare.
He, therefore, thou nice crutch:
A fool's guntlet now, with joints of steel,
Mail glove in hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
On these new crutches let them learn to walk. Dryden's George II.

Th' star defect, it is help less aid call'd wife,
The bending crutch of a decrepit life. Dryden.
Rhyme is a crutch that lifts the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Swift.

The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe. Pope.

2. It is used for old age.

Beauty doth varnish age, as if new born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy. Shakespeare.

To CRUTCH. v. a. [from crutch.] To support on crutches as a cripple.

I hasten Og and Dug to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse. Dryden.

To CRY. v. n. [crier, French.]

1. To speak with vehemence and loudness.

Methought I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep! the innocent sleep. Shakespeare.

While his falling tears the stream supplied,
This mourning to his mother goddess cried. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To call importunately.

I cried, by reason of mine affliction, unto the Lord, and he heard me. Jonah.

C R Y

us go. Isaiah.

4. To proclaim; to make publick.

Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem. Jeremiah.

5. To exclaim.

Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men,
For their guiltless blood must cry against them. Isaiah.

What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate? Shakespeare.

If dicing, mistrelling, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry Against thee. Shakespeare.

Lysimachus having obtained the favour of seeing his ships and machines, surprised at the contrivance, cried out, that they were not more than human art. Isaiah.

6. To utter lamentations.

We came crying hither;
Thou know'st, the first time that we touch'd the air. Shakespeare.

We wail and cry. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of them, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. Isaiah.

When any evil has been upon philosophers, they groan as pitifully, and cry out as loudly, as other men. Isaiah.

7. To squall, as an infant.

Should some god tell me, that I should burn,
And cry again, his offer I should scorn. Pope.

Thus, in a starry night, loud children cry
For the rich sparkles that adorn the sky. Isaiah.

He struggles not for breath, and is for aye,
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid. Isaiah.

The child certainly knows, that the water-seed or mustard-seed it sows, is not the apple or fig it cries for. Isaiah.

8. To weep; to shed tears.

Her who still weeps with plump eyes,
And her who is dry cora, and never cries. Pope.

9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal.

He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry. Pope.

The beasts of the field cry also unto thee. Isaiah.

10. To yelp, as a hound on a scent.

He cried upon it at the meekest lot.
Trust me, I take him for the better dog. Shakespeare.

To CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution.

She seeks, she sighs, but no where spies him.
Love is lost, and thus she cries him. Shakespeare.

To CRY down. v. a.

1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry.

Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there is atheism in it. Isaiah.

Men of dissolute lives cry down religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it. Isaiah.

2. To prohibit.

By all means cry down that unworthy couple of late times, that they should pay money. Isaiah.

3. To overbear.

I'll to the king,
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's intolence. Shakespeare.

To CRY out. v. n.

1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour.

They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty. Isaiah.

With that Sufanna cried with a loud voice, and the two elders cried out against her. Isaiah.

CRY

2. To complain loudly.
We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration.
Atterbury.
3. To blame; to censure: with of, against, upon.
Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities;
And that same word even now cries out on us.
Shakespeare

Oldly censure
Will then cry out of Marcus: oh, if he Had borne the business, Shakespeare.
Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard.
Job.

Cry out upon the stars for doing
Ill offices, to cross their wooing. Hudibras.
Epiphanius cries out upon it, as rank idolatry,
and destructive to their souls who did it.
Stillingfleet.

Tumult, sedition, and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypothesis cry out against. Locke.
I find every sect, as far as reason will help them, make use of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out, it is matter of faith, and above reason. Locke.

4. To declare loud.
5. To be in labour.
What! is the crying out? —
—So said her woman; and that her suffrance inide
Each pang a death. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

To CRY up. v. a.
1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.
Instead of crying up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom. Bacon.
The philosopher deservedly suspected himself of vanity, when cried up by the multitude.
Gualter's Sappho.

The astrologer, if his predictions come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them. Suck.

They slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it. Tillotson.

He may, out of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that for sacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure. Locke.

Poets, like monarchs, on an eastern throne,
Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame,
And, as they please, give infamy or fame.
Watts.

Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our constant success at a most prodigious rate.
Swift.

2. To raise the price by proclamation.
All the effect that I conceive was made by crying up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here. Temple.

CRY. n. f. [cri, French.]

1. Lamentation; shriek; scream.
And all the first born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land. Exodus.

2. Weeping; mourning.

3. Clamour; outcry.
Amazement seizes all; the general cry
Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die. Dryden.
These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stock. Addison.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.

In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat. Swift.

5. Proclamation.

CRY

6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street: as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.
The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again. Shaks.

8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune. Locke.

9. Importunate call.
Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up thy nor prayer for them. Jeremiah.

10. Yelping of dogs.
He turns the dog, resolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He straight resumes his wonted care. Waller.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.
There shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills. Zechariah.

12. A pack of dogs.
About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd. Milt.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
As reek of th' rotten fens; whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

CRY'AL. n. f. The heron. Ainsworth.

CRY'ER. See CRIER.

CRY'ER. n. f. A kind of hawk, called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift. Ainsworth.

CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτός] Hid-CRYPTICK. } den; secret; occult;
private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptic ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficacy of second causes.
Glaucon's Hippo.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; secretly: perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written critically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense without cryptically distinguishing it from those savors that are akin to it. Boyle.

CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτός and γραφία.]

1. The art of writing secret characters.
2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTOLOGY. n. f. [κρυπτός and λογία.]
Enigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elastic, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either bemisted with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body which has much employed the writers on optics, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

CRY

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in stalactites. Bucan.

It crystal be a stone, it is not immediately converted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known and distinguished by the degree of its transparency and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same.
Woodward.

2. Crystal is also used for a factitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass;
though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal.
Chambers.

3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or coagulated in manner of crystal. Chambers.

It the me stream be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bucan.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy crystal window open, look out. Shakspeare.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds,
By crystal streams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shakspeare.
We provided ourselves with some small receptacles, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clustring of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides, the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them.
Bacon's Natural History.

He on the wings of cherub rode fulltime
On the crystalline sky, in sapphire throne'd.
Blind us far and wide. Milton.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them.
Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Rau.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. f. [from crystalline.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of crystal, variously modified,
according to the nature and texture of the salts.
The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its fluidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is fast enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that, before being so much divided and reduced into particles, yet when they are turned into crystals, they each of them resume their proper shape; that one might as easily divide them of their natural, as of their figured. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals.

2. The mafs formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallic and mineral concretions were collected by the water, which brought the particles, whereof each concretion is formed, amongst the matter of the fluid.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concretize in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in oxy-ford, or oxy of nitre, you may, by the addition of a little oil, obtain a quantity of crystals.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concretize, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline.

Abstruse crystallization.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outface the fiercest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cub from the bear's claw.

This night, wherein the half-drawn bear would couch,

The lion, and the belly-patched wolf,
Keep their fur dry.

In the eagle's destroying on the cub, there's power executed with oppression.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tossed,

One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou ferocious cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath fown a grizzle on thy case?
Or wilt not else thy craft to quickly grow,
That thus one trip shall be thine overthrow?

O most comical sight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwell's shop last night; but, such was unluckily cub!

TO CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub in a cabin, or a matron's bed,
On a brown geese with half-swimmers fed;
Dead wine, that thinks of the horridness, sup
From a foul jock, or a cub in a cup.

CUBATION. n. f. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body.

CUBE. n. f. [from cu, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal.

2. [In arithmetic.] See CUBICK Number.

All the matter planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances.

CUBE Root. } n. f. The origin of a CUBICK Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight.

CUBEN. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromatick smell, and is used to the taste. Cubens are brought from Java.

A cubick, as cloves, cinnamon, and nutmeg, are used to give poor wines, to correct their acidity.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel containing ten cubits of air, will act faster a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it is consumed.

It is also a hundred times more particular than, that you do not call any given letter times with four cubical dice; because there are many several combinations of the six faces of the dice.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produces sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produces the cubical number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a number of six cubical minutes, there must be a hundred and twenty and cubical numbers, yet, of necessity, the cubical is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubical number.

The number of ten has been as highly exalted, as containing even, odd, long a square, quadrate and cubical numbers.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Cubical, by degrees, changed their chamber beds into cubicular, and introduced a fashion to go to the bottom with their feet.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature; and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being cubited and measured by cubits.

Measured by cubits, length, and breadth, and height.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitilis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below they appeared in a cuckoo stature.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds, and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel.

I am mounted on a chair-curse,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, French, from cuckoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is faithless to his bed.

But for all the whole world, why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him march? I should venture to give it a try.

There have been,
Or I am much deceived, cuckolds;
And many a man there is, even at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife fast;
That little thinks she has been fuddled in his absence.

For though the law makes null the adulterous deed

Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed.

Ever since the reign of king Charles the first, an adulteress is made a cuckold, the deluded husband banished, and adultery and fornication committed behind the scenes.

TO CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

Put suffer not thy wife, should I to roam,
Nor that in streets with amorous man face;
For this is to cuckold thee before thy face.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor *cuckold*ly knave, I know him not.
Yet I wrong him to call him poor, thy thy
I know knave hath masses of money.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spread any that had a head to hit, or a young or old, he is thy cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a cuckold again.

One Heim do, cuckoldmaker of this city, conspired to steal her away.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

See not making our morning but her bed, and confounding cuckoldom against me.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the cuckold man of the parish that knows of his bed, is much to be pitied.

CUCROO. n. f. [cuculus, Lat. cuculus, Welsh; cocu, French; cuckoo, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

CUD

Finishing Mopla, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.
The merry cuckoo, messenger of spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plainfong cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, may. Shakespeare.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do tout
by night:
Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds at night. Shakespeare.

I deduce
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Thomson.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a scater about, then, to praise him for running!—A horseback, ye cuckoo.
—but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shaks.

CUCKOO-BUD.

n. f. [car.aminus, CUCKOO-FLOWER. } Latin.] The name of a flower.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shaks.

Nettles, cuckoo flowers, Shakspeare.
Dandel, and all the little weeds. Shakspeare.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. f. [cuckoo and spittle.]
Cuckoo-spittle, or woodcock, is that upon a dew or condensation, or both, and upon ponds, especially about the joints of ivy and roses, observable with us about the latter end of May. Linnaeus.

CU'CALLATE. } adj. [cuellatus, hooded, CU'CALLATIN. } Latin.]

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.]

A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued to one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular, is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town.
Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Cowell.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be cas-

DAFFODIL.

DAFFODILLY. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from aphodellus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green ground with daffodown-dillies,

And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Spenser.

Bid smaranthus all his beauty shed,

And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,

To blow the laureat herb where Lycid lies. Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead

For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:

The short narcissus, and tall daffodillies,

I need to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DAG. v. a. [contracted from daft;

that is, to throw back, to throw off.]

To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,

And his comrades, that daft the world aside

And bid it pass. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

I would the had fellow'd this dudge on me,

I would have daft all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakespeare.

DAG. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A dagger.

2. A hand-gun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

To DAG. v. a. [from daggle.] To daggle;

to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word.]

DAGGER. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A short sword; a poinard.

She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Shakespeare.

There was a dagger had his page,

That was but little for his age,

And then he went on him so

As darts upon his ghastly breast do. Holbein.

He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he kills him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Andersen.

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.

3. [With printers.] The obelisk; a mark of reference in form of a dagger;

as [†].

DAGGERDRAWING. n. f. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers;

approach to open violence.

They always are at daggerdrawing. Holbein.

And one another clapperclawing.

I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggerdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DAGGLE. v. a. [from dag, dew;

a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag, sprinkled, or dag, to dip.

They are probably all of the same root.]

To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DAGGLE. v. n. To be in the mire;

to run through wet or dirt.

Nor like a poppy, dagged through the town,

To fetch and carry slug-slug up and down. Pope.

DAGGLEDTAIL. adj. [daggle and tail.]

Bemired; dipped in the water or mud;

bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many daggedtail

parsons that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DAILY. adj. [baglic, Saxon.] Happening

every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince. Shakespeare.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief

DAILY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with better sense advise,

That of the world least part to us is read;

And daily how through hardy caterpiz,

Many great regions are discovered. Fanny Queen.

A man with whom I conversed almost daily for years together. Dryden.

DAILY. adv. [from dainty.]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open daylight, that doth not show the mists and mountrains and triumphs of the world, but so clearly and daintily as candle-light. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is nothing in our earth so daintily watered,

with such great navigable rivers. Bacon.

Those young suitors had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily. Bacon's View of Epick Poem.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.

4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DAILY. n. f. [from dainty.]

1. Delicacy; softness.

What should yet the palate please?

Dainties and lot of eat,

Sleeked limbs and fresh blood? Ben Jonson.

2. Elegance; nicety.

The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Hutcheson.

3. Delicacy; deliciousness.

It was more notable for the daintiness of the provision which he served up, than for the magnificence of the dish. Hutcheson on Providence.

4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.

Of sand, and lime, and clay, Venerus bath

dilour'd without any daintiness. Milton.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DAILY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate,

which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleading to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

Higher concert was required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbers are a little d. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice;

squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the flower, yet the daintiest sense;

For even the ears of such as have no skill

Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;

And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Dante.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes I'll swear hath corns. Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.
Therefore to horse;
And let us not be dirty of leave-taking,
But thirt away. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.
4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.
My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands.
Shakspeare.

Why should we be so cruel to ourselves,
And do those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy?
5. Nice; affectively fine; in contempt.
Your dainty speakers have the curles,
To plead bad causes down to worse.

DAINTY. n. f.
1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.
Be not desirous of this daintiness, for they are decentful meat.

A worm breedeth in meat, of the flange of a large white maggot, which is given as a dainty to nightingales.
She then produced three dainty stews,
And unbought dainties of the poor.
The shepherd swains, with their abundance laid.

On the far dock and rural dainties feast.
2. A word of fondness formerly in use.
Why that's my dainty; I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom.
There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And let thee aloft.

DARTY. n. f. [from dy, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.
Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding of dairy, and thus advanced the trade of English butter.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.
You have no more worth
Then the roasts and country dairy,
That doth haunt the hearts of dairy. Ben Jonson.
What stores may dairy and my folds contain?
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milk cattle are kept.
Dairies, being well housed, are exceeding commodious.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they do feed upon bread and fish.

DAIRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.]
The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an inch
To arise their fortune, equal to the rest.
The dairy maid engages with the milk
Tie duty taylor, and the cook's fortune.
Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairy-maids.

DAISY. n. f. [dazgeage, day's eye.
Chaucer.] A spring flower.

In bath a peacock root: the stalks are naked, and never branch into the cup of the flower is long and taper, divided into many segments to the root. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, when the petals are fallen off, resemble oblate cones.
When daisies grow, and vernal blue,
And lady smocks are over the hill,
And cuckoo buds are yet in hue
Do paint the meadows much befit, Shakspeare.

This will find thee picking of daisies, or (including to a lock of hay.
Fair-handed spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet.

DALF. n. f. [dalf, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long hill with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dalf,
She wand'ring many a wood, and in a dalf many a vale.

Before the downfall of the four dalfs,
This dalf a peering region, no unblest,
This dalf possess'd they, and had still possess'd.

He steals along the lonely dalf.

DALLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest passions are drawn
To the fire of the blood.
Not gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; not youthful dalliance, as befores;
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er;
My warlike spirit will know another way,
And my soul's hand will jump in.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, till he lay with the found,
Where he with his Due found his found,
In his came nothing forth from inner bowels.

That bower not my neck, where the lapient
Held his love with his Egyptian spouse.

Thou claim'st flame for thy fire,
And my hand is as show'ring me, the dear pledge
Of our love, and a better treasure.

3. Delay; procrastination.

But he is not a gentleman;
And I have seen him in a better way,
— In a better way, I have seen him in a better way,
— In a better way, I have seen him in a better way.

DALLER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifle;
a fondler.

The daller is a playful word, with fairly counter, and with wagers, purposed to be left before they were purposed to be made.

DALLOR. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]
A tale, or clump. Not in use.

On the way to the land and we will go hand,
Leave thinking of a daller time ye do land.

TO DALLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy matter;
It thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,
With thy sword, and suffer to defend him,
Stand in a daller tale.

He left his gun, and having build
Up his house, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our lives are at stake.

D A M

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised, for there is no dallying with hunger.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not loosing on a low love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtiers,
But meditating with two deep divines.

3. To sport; to play; to frolic.

She her arms bunched in the cedar's top,
And dalled with the wind, and scorns the sun.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dalled with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God.

TO DALLY. v. a. To put off; to delay;
to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service, not by the hazard of the battle, but by dallying off the time with trifling skirmishes.

DAME. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperor, should never his dame have been flatter'd by Chaucer.]

1. The mother; used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam turns howling up and down,
Looking the way her harkins you gone went,
And can do nought but wail her darling down.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have prayer. — Alas, my child, says the dam, where of the gods shall I go to?

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not sewers, it may be, that there are eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dam, do all at once, with freedness, hold up their heads and open their mouths.

2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.

Thus that is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire.

DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
A dower flows the level grounds,
Trade banks and dams, that like a screen
Did keep it out, now keep it in.

Not with this fiercer rage the flowing flood Raves, when he finds his rapid course withstood.
Bears down the dams with unchilled fury,
And sweeps the cattle and the cuts away.
Let loose the reins to all your wily flouts,
Bear down the dams, and open every do.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and thought; and it is made very strong on each side, it is the better.

TO DAM. v. a. [demman, pope-demman,
Six. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water, by moles or dams.

I have the current in this place brought up;
And here the trout and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly.

Home I would go,
But that my doots are hateful to my eyes,
Full'd and dam'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.

Roggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;

As streams, when dam'd, forget their ancient current,
And, winding at their banks, in other channels flow.

DAMNIFIC, adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

To DAMNIFY, v. a. [from damnify, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can retri- bute satisfaction: the damified person has no power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by a sort of self-preservation. Locke

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear, As if late fight had not him damified, He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear. Fair Quene

DAMNINGNESS, n. f. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, but his temptations and damningness will tempt him, and to think himself a complete penitent. Harwood

DAMP, adj. [damp, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

See but no more, the trembling Tri- jant hear, O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear. Dryden

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks

Downcast and damp: yet such wherein appear'd Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton

DAMP, n. f.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as the man tell, Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air

Accompanied with damps and dreadful gloom. Milton

A rift there was, where from the mountain's height

Convey'd a gleaming and malignant light;

A breathing-pipe, to draw the damps away,

A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun, in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, exalts those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Hooder

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold fur- ten damp Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd, To Michael thus his humble words address'd. Milton

His name struck every where so great a damp, As Archimedes through the Roman camp

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,

A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thought. Addison

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever, a prospect enough to cast a damp over his best hours. Regis

This commendable repentment against me, Shew'd a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and orders of men. Swift

To DAMP, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the spirit of another. L. Strange

Dread of death hangs over the race natural

man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damp all his jollity. Atterbury

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such counts they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Steele

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A stiff body dampeth the quand much more than a hard. Baron

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Many dulle and damp all industry, improvement, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this flag. Baron

U less an age too late, or cold Climate, or years, damp my intended wing

Depress'd. Milton

DAMPISHNESS, n. f. [from damp] Tendency to wetness; foginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a layer of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Baron

DAMPNESS, n. f. [from damp.] Moisture; foginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly; 'Twas only water thrown on tails too dry. Dryden

By flocks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and ruins it. Baron

DAMPY, adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The dampy and dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and discourses. Playfair

DAMSEL, n. f. [damoiselle, French]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore, And ore mad damp I dare dispute my power. Prior

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of dampels she was gone In shiny walks, the scorching heat to shun. Dryden

3. A wench; a country lass.

The dampels are whores, and the dampels with child. Gay

DAMSON, n. f. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE

My wife desir'd some damsons, And made me chide with danger of my life. Shakespeare

DAN, n. f. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Croucher well of English undress'd. Douglas

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This figure Juno's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shakespeare

Dick, if this story pleases thee,

Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior

To DANCE, v. a. [danse, Fr. dancer, Span. as some think from tansa, Arabic, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from danza.]

To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He is a peer, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he is a peer. Shakespeare

To DANCE Attendance, v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are looser weary to dance attendance on the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good nature of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essay

It upbraids you, To let your father's friends, for three long months,

To us dance attendance for a word of audience. Dryden

To DANCE, v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandine lov'd thee well; Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Sidney

Thou noble thought more dances my wrattle Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Rebound thy threshold. Shakespeare's Hamlet

In pendence, the malignity of the feet vapour dances the principal joints. Farrar

DANCE, n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by music.

Our dance of custom round about the oak, Here the hunter. Shakespeare

The honourable part of talk is to give occasion, and again to moderate and put to rest what else; for then a man leads the dance. Baron

But you perhaps expect a modish dance, With ambitious songs and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden

DANCER, n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at P. 111 kept His sword e'en like a dancer, while he strook The rein and whisk'd Calisto. Shakespeare

Muchia and dancers take some time With these your pleasing labours, for great use A much weariness as perfection brings. Boon

The earl was to for from being a good dancer, That he was no graceful goer. Baron

It is a usual practice for our fashionable dancers on the rope, to attempt some what to flying. Hooder

He, perfect dancer, climbs the rope And balances your fear and hope. Prior

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part, Forming her servants to the rules of art And, verily, I found that the musician's hand Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command. Prior

DANCINGMASTER, n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by dancingmaster. L. Strange

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the legs of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, with thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding

DANCING-SCHOOL, n. f. [dance and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing-school And teach love 'as high, and sweet courtesies: Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakespeare

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the institution of apes of quality. L. Strange

In dash over ten with a time, with nothing but whole copy extremely, and so a degree thin, I may duplicate you. Shak.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear;
to depress; to suppress.

His tongue
Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear
The better reason, to perplex and dash

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual, humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy.
Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oed.

To dash this caval, read but the practice of christian emperors. Shak.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. Shak.

Nothing dash'd the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,
Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Addison.

- Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.

Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.

To DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stop'd in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall. Thomson.

3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.

Dash, tho' without knowing how or why, Spur'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
Thro' sense and nonsense, never out of in. Dryden.

DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

Stand back you youths, and give us leave awhile
— She takes upon her beauty at first dash. Shakespeare.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hard, hard, the waters fall;
And, with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground.
To gentle flumbers toll. Dryden.

DA'STARD. n. f. [astartiza, Sax.] A coward; a poltroon; a man infamous for fear.

The cowardly and envy of the people,
Permitted by our da'stard rulers.

Have suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whipp'd out of Rome. Shakespeare.

Who now my match? Is valour dare opposite?
How long will Dares wait his dyfard foe? Dryden.

Dyford and donkard, mean and infolent;
Tongue-valiant hero, wanting of thy might,
In treats the forenoon, but the last in fight. Dryden.

Boys bear thoughts, in the minds of children, make them dyfards, and stand of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke.

Curse on their dyfard souls, they stand altogether! Addison.

To DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.

marked at the end or the beginning.

2. The time at which any event happened.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his traded dates
Has limit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;
And now, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declivity of this fate, O friend,
Our date to immortality extend? Prichard.

Then raise,
From the confluent mass, purg'd and re-bred,
New nations, new empires, ages of endless day,
Founded in righteousness. Milton.

6. [from datylus.] The fruit of the date-

2. [In law.] Those are termed dativ executors, who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England. Ayliffe.

TO DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dut. dauber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.
She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exodus.

2. To paint coarsely.

Hally daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it to unnatural as must want to be left to itself.

They marked out of his hands a time-imperfect piece, daubed over with two or three more.

It is a fine picture, with many beauties and good pieces, but enough daubed, as an executioner.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it is upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,
He liv'd from all attender of suspect. Shakespeare.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daub'd with odd.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and where;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.
Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

TO DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

And yet I must.
I cannot daub it further; Shakespeare.

DA'UBER. n. f. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

2. A coarse low painter.
What they called a picture, had been drawn at length by the fingers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to evile laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint the one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas, Hangs a new angel two doors from us, As fine as daubers' hands can make it. South.

3. A low flatterer.

Or shall I come to you at evening mass?—
—My leisure serves me, penitence daughter, now. Shakespeare.

TO DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. domtare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fantas, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rambours loud, when twice remotest kings.

Where the rude ax with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or tug it from their hollow'd haunt. Milton.

Some prefer daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glavin.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare.

Dauntless he notes, and to the fight return'd With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden.

He, not by want of words oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breath. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shown under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. f. [menchala.] It is supposed by Skinner to named from his note; by Jasnius to be corrupted from daul; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.]

A bird.

I w. I wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daul to peck it. Shakespeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That daul, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Dryden.

The loud daul, his throat displaying,
The whole assembly of his fellow dauls. Harley.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Of course if any hollow or daul be in the length. Milton.

TO DAWK. v. n. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the twist coming about of the work would, were a man irregularity of fluid should happen, push the edge into the stuff, and so daul it. Mason.

TO DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance toward day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day now comfort hath inspir'd. Shakespeare.

DAY

As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre.

All night I sleep, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.
A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, bath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promise of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some fine design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Locke.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ
To reach the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

Their tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissolving truth. Locke.

DAY. n. f. [dag, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Milton.
Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Locke.

Or object new Casual discourse draws on, which interrupts
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Locke.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the latest traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
When offer'd us by him, and snatch'd the day.
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Pope.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time: in this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Outheline his heir,
The justest man and truest in his day. F. Quar.

I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Locke.

5. Life: in this sense it is common plural. He never in his days broke a word; that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Carr's Life of Cromwell.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day.
He came, he saw, he conquer'd. Locke.

D A Y

The noble theses do heavenly in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Would you sh' advantage of the fight delay,
By striking first, you were to win the day? Dryden.

1. An appointed or fixed time.
Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deceit their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryden.

DEAMBULATION, n. f. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DEAMBULATORY, adj. [deambulo, Lat.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN, n. f. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French.] From the Greek word deka; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbey translated from abbots or priors, and converted, to dean and chapter) there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to that dignity much like bishops, by long sitting leading out his canonicals to the chapter, the chapter then electing him the bishop confirming them, and giving him mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without other election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Rocking in Essex.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church, they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose.

in the midst of the seas. Exodus.

5. The image of mortality represented by a skeleton.

I had rather be married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. Shakspere.

If I gaze now, 'tis but to see

What manner of death's head 'twill be,

When it is free

From that flesh upper skin,

The death's joy, and sin. Shakspere.

6. Murder; the act of destroying life unlawfully.

As in manifesting the sweet influence of his mercy, on the severe stroke of his justice; so in this, not to suffer a man of death to live. Bacon.

7. Cause of death.

They cried out, and said, O thou man of God,

there is death in the pot. 2 Kings.

He caught his death the last county-fellows,

where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman. Addison.

All the endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, and be the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day. Brown's View of Epic Poetry.

9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.

Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;

They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire. Dryden.

Sounded at once the bow, and fast he flies,

The weather'd death, and hurls thro' the skies. Dryden.

Of, as in any rings they form the heat,

The furious lapwings feel the leaden death. Pope.

10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.

We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghostly enemy, and from exulting death. Church Catechism.

DEATHBED. n. f. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.

Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury.

Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakspere.

Thy death-bed is no less than the land

wherein thou liest in reputation sick. Shakspere.

These are such things as a man shall never be with joy upon his death-bed; such as fill cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and latter agony. Shakspere's Sonnet.

Then round our death-bed every friend this day run, Dryden.

And joy us of our conquest early won. Dryden.

A death-bed figure is certainly the most disabling sight in the world.

A death-bed repentance ought not to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Shakspere.

Fame can never make us lie down contented on a death-bed. Pope.

DEATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destructive; murderous.

Your cruelty was such, as you would tip me life for many deathful moments. Shakspere.

Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath wofed that very virtue of nature in man, and beast, and plant. Racine.

Blood, death, and deathful deeds, are in the noise. Shakspere.

DEBATE. n. f. [debat, French.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.

A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better.
Locke.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy.
Watts.

2. A quarrel; a contest: it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Shakspeare.

'Tis thine to ruin realms, to turn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate.
Dryden.

TO DEBATE. v. a. [debate, French.]

A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debauch'd and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin.
Wood.

Thus it is to counsel things that are unwholesome, first, to debauch a king to listen his laws, and then to seek protection.
Swift.

DEB

2. To corrupt with lewdness.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn.
Shakspeare.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality.
Tillotson.

DEBAUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.

He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns.
Cicero.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.

The first physicians by debauch were made;
Excess began, and sloth followed, the trade Dryd.

DEBAUCHER. n. f. [from debauch.]

A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest de-

Rehobotham dwelt in Jerusalem, and built cities for defence in Judah. 2 Chron.

The Lord is your protection and strong stay, defence from head, and a cover from the sun. Psalms.

Be thou my strong rock for an house of defence to save me. Psalms.

Against all this there seems to be no defence but that of supporting one established form of doctrine and discipline. Stowe.

2. Vindication; justification; apology.

Alexander backoned with his hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. Acts.

The youthful prince

With scorn replied, and made this bold defence. Dryden.

The Novatian heresy was very apt to arrest well-meaning souls, who, seeing it had such express defiance to apostasy, could not suspect that it was itself any defection from the faith.

Decay of Piety.

Nobody will so openly bid defiance to common sense, as to affirm visible and direct contradictions.

Locke.

DEFICIENCY. n. f. [from deficio, Latin.]

1. Want; something less than is necessary.

What is to be considered in this case, is chiefly, id est here be a sufficient fulness or deficiency of blood, for different methods are to be taken.

Arctius in Diet.

There is no burden laid upon our posterity, nor any deficiency to be hereafter made up by ourselves, which has been our case in so many other subsidies.

Addison.

2. Defect; failing; imperfection.

Schegler, finding a defect in the reason of Aristotle, introduceth one of no less deficiency himself.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Then in thyself art perfect, and in thee is no deficiency found.

Milton.

We find, in our own natures, too great evidence of intellectual deficiency, and deplorable confessions of human ignorance.

Glauco.

What great deficiency is it, if we come short of others?

Sprad.

The characters of comedy and tragedy are never to be made perfect, but always to be drawn with some specks of frailty and deficiency, such as they have been described to us in history.

Dryden.

DEFICIENT. adj. [from deficio, Latin.] Failing; wanting; defective; imperfect.

O woman! best of all things, as the will Of God ordain'd them: his creating hand Nothing imperfect or deficient left.

Milton.

Figures are either simple or mixed: the simple be either circular or angular; and of circular, either complete, as circles, or deficient, as ovals.

Wotton.

Neither Virgil nor Homer were deficient in any of the former beauties.

Dryden.

Several thoughts of the mind, for which we have either none, or very deficient names, are diligently to be studied.

Locke.

DEFICIENT Numbers [in arithmetick] are those numbers, whose parts, added together, make less than the integer, whose parts they are.

DEFIER. n. f. [from deffo, Fr.] A challenger; a contemner; one that dares and defies.

Is it not then high time that the laws should provide, by the most prudent and effectual means, to curb those bold and insolent defiers of Heaven?

Timothy.

TO DEFILE. v. a. [from defilare, Saxon; from ful, foul.]

1. To make foul or impure; to make nasty or filthy; to dirty.

There is a thing, Harry, known to many in our land by the name of pitch; this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile.

He is justly reckoned among the greatest pretences of this age, however his character may be defiled by mean and dirty hands.

Swift.

2. To pollute; to make legally or ritually impure.

At which death of itself he shall not eat, to defile himself the earth.

Levi.

Neither shall he defile himself for his father.

Levi.

3. To corrupt chastity; to violate.

Every subject his office defiled.

The husband murder'd, and the wife defil'd.

Prior.

4. To taint; to corrupt; to violate; to make guilty.

Forgetfulness of good turns, defiling of souls, adultery, and shameless uncleanness.

Milford.

God requires rather that we should die, than defile ourselves with impieties.

Strillingfleet.

Let not any instances of sin defile your requests.

Wake.

TO DEFILER. v. n. [from defiler, Fr.] To murther; to go off file by file.

DEFILER. n. f. [from defiler, Fr. from file, a line of soldiers, which is derived from filum, a thread.] A narrow passage; a long narrow pass; a lane.

There is in Oxford a narrow defile, to use the military term, where the partisans used to encounter.

Addison.

DEFILEMENT. n. f. [from defile.] The state of being defiled; the act of defiling; nastiness; pollution; corruption; defecation.

Lust,

By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk, Let us defilement to the inward parts.

Milman.

The unchaste are provoked to see their vice exposed, and the chaste cannot take into such slish without danger of defilement.

Spectator.

DEFILER. n. f. [from defile.] One that defiles; a corrupter; a violator.

At the last tremendous day, I shall hold forth in my arms my much wronged child, and call aloud for vengeance on her defiler.

Addison.

DEFINABLE. adj. [from definae.]

1. That may be defined; capable of definition.

The Supreme Nature we cannot otherwise define, than by saying it is infinite: as if infinite were defensible, or infinity a subject for our narrow understanding.

Dryden.

2. That may be ascertained.

Concerning the time of the end of the world, the question is, whether that time be definable or no.

Burns's Theory.

TO DEFINE. v. a. [from definio, Lat. definae French.]

1. To give the definition; to explain a thing by its qualities and circumstances.

Whole can you mean, if thou mean, That dost so well their miserly defuse?

Sidney.

Though defining be thought the proper way to make known the proper signification, yet there are some words that will not be defined.

Locke.

2. To circumscribe; to mark the limits; to bound.

When the rings appeared only black and white, they were very distinct and well defined, and the blackness seemed as intense as that of the central spot.

Newton.

TO DEFINE. v. n. To determine; to decide; to decree.

The unjust judge is the capital, receiver of landings, waxes ne defers lands of lands and properties.

Bacon.

DEFINER. n. f. [from define.] One that explains; one that describes a thing by its qualities.

Yea God, forsooth, is found Incomprehensible and infinite.

But is he there to be found? Vain searcher! No:

Let your imperfect definition show,

That nothing you, the weak definer, know.

Prior.

DEFINITE. adj. [from definitus, Lat.]

1. Certain; limited; bounded.

Slower to your about doing things be required, and how, by your means, had the light of the goddess, who in a definite compass can set forth infinite beauty.

Sidney.

2. Exact; precise.

Idioms, in this contest favour, would

Be wisely definite.

Shakspeare.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel or inquisition, which succeeds in the place of accusation, some certain and definite time.

Ayliffe's Parragon.

DEFINITE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Thing explained or defined.

Special bastardy is nothing else but the definition of the general; and the general, again, is nothing else but a definite of the special.

Ayliffe.

DEFINITENESS. n. f. [from definite.] Certainty; limitedness.

Did.

DEFINITION. n. f. [from definitio, Lat. definition, French.]

1. A short description of a thing by its properties.

I drew my definition of poetical wit from my particular consideration of him; for propriety of thoughts and words is only to be found in him.

Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logic.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and differences.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal, merely, for that is not an adequate and distinct definition.

Bentley.

DEFINITIVE. adj. [from definitivus, Lat.] Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write when dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a direct and definitive truth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I make haste to the casting and comparing of the whole work, it being indeed the very definitive form of this art, to distribute nicely and gracefully a well chosen plot.

Warren.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.]

Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks; but my duty, Unmeasurable, thuns your high request.

Shakspeare.

Belshazzar faith, be silent: we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumstantially and definitively in more places at once.

Hall.

That Methodist who was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, was definitively set down by Moses.

Brown.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. f. [from definitive.] Definiteness.

Did.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. f. [from deflagro, Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time, than the opening of the ready deflagrability, it is easy to speak, of salt-petre and potassium to imagine.

Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of walling away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our deflagrable bits, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best kind of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable.

DEFLAGRATION. n. f. [from deflagration, Lat.] A term frequently made use of in chemistry, for letting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Ethiopians with fire, with sulphur, and many others.

The true reason why paper is not buried by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist.

DEFLECT. v. n. [deflecto, Lat.] To turn aside; to deviate from a true course or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflects not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle whorleth to the west.

For, did not come from a straight course deflect, They could not meet, they could no world meet.

DEFLECTION. n. f. [deflectio, Lat.] Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the south on the upper side of the equator; and at the very line, or middle circle, stand without deflection.

1. A turning aside, or out of the way.
2. [In navigation] The departure of a ship from its true course.

DEFLEXURE. n. f. [deflexio, Lat.] A bending down; a turning aside, or out of the way.

DEFLORATION. n. f. [defloratio, French; from defloratus, Lat.]

1. The act of deflouring; the taking away of a woman's virginity.
2. A tickle of that which is most valuable.

The laws of Normandy are, in a great measure, the deflation of the English laws, and a transcript of them.

DEFLOUR. v. a. [deflorer, Fr.] To ravish; to take away a woman's virginity.

As is the lust of an eunuch to deflower a virgin, so is he that executeth judgment with violence.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely moor,
And let my splendid sons this truth deflower.

1. To take away the beauty and grace of any thing.

How on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, deflower'd, and now to death devote!

If he died young, he died innocent, and before the sweetness of his soul was deflower'd and ravish'd from him by the flames and furies of a forward age.

DEFLOURER. n. f. [deflorer, Fr.] A ravisher; one that takes away virginity. I have often wondered, that those deflowers of innocence, though dead to all the sentiments of virtue and honour, are not restrained by humanity.

DEFLOUSE. adj. [defluere, Lat.] 1. That flows down.

2. That falls off.

DEFLOUX. n. f. [defluxus, Lat.] Downward flow.

Both bodies are clumpy, and hold the deflux of humours, without penning them in too much.

DEFLOXION. n. f. [defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downward.

We see that taking out moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so dash cold likewise canse rheums and defensions from the head.

DEPLY. adv. [from depl.] Dexterously; skillfully. Obsolete. Properly deply.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot
To the instrument;
They daunce deply, and singen footen,
In their meriment.

DEPOSDATION. n. f. [from deposed, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written deposdation.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and insinuated through the whole, which the deposdation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth!

DEPOSSEMENT. n. f. [from deposs.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

TO DEFORM. v. a. [deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curst of all for proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.

Winty bluffs
Deface the year's delights.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair.

DEFORM. adj. [deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,
That whoe kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dower.

So spake the grisly terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform.
Sight to deform what heart of rock could long Dry-eyed behold?

DEFORMATION. n. f. [deformatio, Lat.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFORMED. participial adj. Ugly; wanting natural beauty.

DEFORMEDLY. adv. [from deform.] In an ugly manner.

DEFORMEDNESS. n. f. [from deformed.] Ugliness; a disagreeable form.

DEFORMITY. n. f. [deformatas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness; unfavourableness.
1. In this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And desert on mine own deformity.

Proper deformity seems not in the hand
So horrid as in woman.

Where fits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal line,
To disproportion me in every part.

Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude
In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt?

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.
In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformities.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.
No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming.

DEFOUSSER. n. f. [from fousser, Fr.] One that overcomes and casts out by force. A law term.

TO DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Lat.] To rob or deprive by a wife or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile; with of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have to earned you and requited.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long.

Churches seem injured and defrauded of their right, when places, not sanctified as they are, present them unnecessarily in that pre-eminence and honour.

These they, who brothers better claim dower,
Easel their parents, and usurp the throne;
Defraud their clients, and, to lure gold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold.

But now he sear'd Britons' hearth's charms,
And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms.

There is a portion of our lives which every wife man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country.

DEFAUDATION. n. f. [defraudo, Lat.] Privation by fraud.

Their impostures are worse than any other, deluding not only into pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death.

DEFAUDER. n. f. [from defraud.] A deceiver; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow severe,
Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere.

TO DEFRA'Y. v. a. [defrayer, Fr.] To bear the charges of; to discharge expences.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifices.

It is easy to lay a charge upon any town; but to foresee how the same may be answered, and defray'd, is the chief part of good government.

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay, neither shall you stay one day the less for that.

DEFRA'YER. n. f. [from defray.] One that discharges expences.

DEFRA'YMENT. n. f. [from defray.] The payment of expences.

DEFT. adj. [deft, Sax.] Obsolete.

1. Neat; handsome; spruce.

2. Proper; fitting.

You go not the way to examine: you must call the watch that are their accusers.

—Yes, marry, that's the deftest way.

3. Ready; dexterous.

Loud his of laughter seiz'd the guests, to see
The lumping god so deft at his new mimicry.

The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,
And my cat, Tity, play deftest feats around.

DEFTLY. adv. [from deft.] Obsolete.

1. Neatly; dexterously.

Come, high or low,
Thyself and office deftly show.

2. In a skillful manner.

Young Colin Clout, a lad of peerless need,
Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed.

DEE

DEFUNCT. adj. [defunctus, Lat.] Dead; deceased.

I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In my dissent, and proper satisfaction. Shaksp.
Here empty and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies. Hudibras

DEFUNCT. m. f. [from the adjective.]

One that is deceased; a dead man or woman.

Nature doth abhor to make his couch
With the defunct; or sleep upon the dead.

In many cases, the surgeons are able to the opinion of the physician who was with the patient, as they received the same from the friends of the defunct. Granger

DEFUNCTION. n. f. [from defunctus.]
Death.

Nor did the French possess the Sologne land
Until four hundred and an hundred years
After the death of King P. Shaksp.

TO DEFEY. v. n. [deffere, Fr. from de fele, deffere, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult.]

1. To call to combat; to challenge.

I once again
Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight. Milton

Where took retreat, now I am come to thee?
Safe is that guard, I durst even hush; defy;
Without it, tremble now when heaven is high.

Agas, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,
To single battle the boldest he defied. Dryden

2. To treat with contempt; to slight.

As many look that stand in better face,
Garb'd like him, that for a lucky word
Defy the matter. Shaksp.

DEFFY. n. f. [from the verb.] A challenge; an invitation to fight: this is now hardly used.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,
His trumpet sounds, the challenge makes reply:

With clangour rings the field, resounds the valley dry. Dryden

DEFFER. n. f. [from deffere.] A challenger; one that invites to fight: more properly deffer.

God may revenge the affront put upon thee by such impudent defers of mine, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by mine. South.

DEGENERACY. n. f. [from degeneratio,
Latin.]

1. A departure from the virtue of our ancestors.

2. A deflection of that which is good.

'Tis true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us. Thoson

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present. South.

3. Meanness.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as perverseness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Adison

TO DEGENERATE. v. n. [degenerare,
Lat. degenero, Fr. degenerer, Span.]

1. To fall from the virtue of ancestors.

2. To fall from a more noble to a base state.

When wit transgresses decency, it degenerates into silliness and impudence. Indefatigable

DEE

3. To fall from its kind; to grow wild or base.

Mist of those suits that use to be grafted, if they be let of kernels or stones, degenerate. Bacon

DEGENERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough

To fight against me under Percy's pay;

To dig his heels, and curtsy at his frowns;

To show how much thou art degenerate. Shaksp.

Yet thou hast greater cause to be Ashamed of them, than they of thee;
Degenerate from their ancient blood,
Since not the court allow'd them food. Swift

2. Unworthy; base; departing from its kind or nature.

So all that ruin degenerate, all deprav'd;
Justice and temperance, truth and faith, forgot!
Onguns except. Milton

When a man so far becomes degenerate as to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly an injury done to some person or other. Locke

DEGENERATENESS. n. f. [from degene- rate.] Degeneracy; a being grown wild, or out of kind.

DEGENERATION. n. f. [from degenerate.]

1. A deviation from the virtue of one's ancestors.

2. A falling from a more excellent state to one of less worth.

3. The thing changed from its primitive

state.

In plants, these transplantations are obvious,
as that of barley into oats, or wheat into darnel;
and these grains which generally arise among corn, as cockle, and so forth, are other degenerations. Brown's Vulgar Errors

DEGENEROUS. adj. [from degenero, Lat.]

1. Degenerated; fallen from the virtue and merit of ancestors.

2. Vile; base; infamous; unworthy.

Let not the tumultuary violence of some men's moderate demands ever betray me to that degenerous and unmanly slavery, which should make me think them by my consent. King Charles

Same, instead of pity, reflects them from many base and degenerate passions. South

Degenerate passion, and his man too base,
It is its empire in the female race;
These rage, and to make its blow secure,
Pierces the heart, until the aim be sure. Dryden

DEGENEROUSLY. adv. [from degenerous.]

In a degenerate manner; basely; meanly.

How wounding a spectacle is it to a hero, like Hercules at the dish, thus degenerously employed! Dryden

DEGLUTITION. n. f. [deglutition, Fr.
from deglutire, Lat.] The act or power of swallowing.

When the deglutition is totally abolished, the patient must be nourished by clysters. Boissier

DEGRADATION. n. f. [degradation, Fr.]

1. A deprivation of dignity; dismission from office.

The word degradation, is commonly used to denote a deprivation and removing of a man from his degree. Aspley

2. Degeneracy; baseness.

So deplorable is the degradation of our nature,
that whereas before we bore the image of God,
we now retain only the image of men. South

3. Diminution, with respect to strength, efficacy, or value.

DEE

4. [In painting.] A term made use of to express the lessening and rendering confused the appearance of distant objects in a landscape, so, as they may appear there as they would do to an eye placed at that distance from them. Dick

TO DEGRADE. v. n. [degrader, Fr.]

1. To put one from his degree; to deprive him of his office, dignity, or title.

He should Be quite degraded, like a hedgehorn (wain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shaksp.

2. To lessen; to diminish the value of.

Nor shalt thou, by descending to assume,
Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own. Miln

All higher knowledge in her pretence falls Degraded. Milton

3. To reduce from a higher to a lower state, with respect to qualities: as, gold is degraded into silver.

DEGRADATION. n. f. [from degrader, of degrade, Lat.] The act of making heavy. Leff

DEGREE. n. f. [degré, Fr. from grad- us, Latin.]

1. Quality; rank; station; place of dignity.

It was my fortune, common to that age,
To love a lady fair, of great degree,

The which was born of noble parentage,
And let in highest fast of dignity. Spenser

I embrace willingly the ancient received use and convenience of that discipline, which is inferior degree and orders in the church. Locke

Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye: to be kind in the building, they are all together lighter than vanity. Job

Well then, Colville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the due. Shaksp.

Degree being varied,
Th' unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask. South

This noble youth to madcaps lov'd a maid,
Of high degree, Honour was her name. Shaksp.

Farmers in degree;
He a good husband, a good housewife the degree;
But if no rank, no station, no degree,
From this contagious taint of sorrow free? Shaksp.

2. The comparative state and condition in which a thing is.

The book of Wisdom noeth degrees of wisdom, making that of worshipping petty and vile, and more gross than simply the worshipping of the creature. Bacon

As if there were degrees in infinite,
And heaven itself had rather want perfection,
Than punish to excess. Dryden

Poetry Admits of no degree; but must be still Sublimely good, or disdainably ill. Johnson

3. A step or preparation to any thing

Her first degree was by setting forth her learning, truly in nature not to be mistaken, but as much

[In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMAN'D. n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

DEM

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them.

2. A question; an interrogation.
3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.
My book-teller tells me, the demand for these my papers increases daily.
4. [In law.] The asking of what is due.
It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or selling of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law.

DEMANDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All sums demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been rayed in the way to the banquer.

DEMANDANT. n. f. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.
One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the figure's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted.

DEMANDER. n. f. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.
2. One that asks a question.
3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.
They gave us very fair and fit, which also better the estate, and did verily seem to the demand-ers ready use at all points.
4. A dinner; one that demands a debt.

DEMEAN. n. f. [from demer, Fr.] A mien; presence; carriage; demeanour;
deportment.

At six feet, with formal demer,
And dandy hue, an armed gentleman.

TO DEMEAN. v. a. [from demer, Fr.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.
These plain and simple lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately.
2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.
Now, out of doubt, Amphibolus is mad;
Else he would never to demean himself.

DEM

DEMEANOUR. n. f. [demer, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour.

His gestures fierce
He mark'd, and mid demeanour, then alone,
As he supposed, all unobserv'd, unseen.

DEMEANS. n. f. pl. properly demerues.
An estate in lands; that which a man possesses in his own right.

TO DEMENTATE. v. n. [demento, Lat.]

DEMERIT. n. f. [demerite, Fr. from demeritus, of demeror, Latin]

1. The opposite to merit; ill deserving; what makes one worthy of blame or punishment.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits.

Thou liv'st by me, to me thy breath resign.
Mine is the merit, the demerit thine.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity, should be blame, not to be valued by any demerit or offence, and the custom of the family.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal blood, and my demerits
May speak, unbarnetted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd.

Ten engines, that shall be of equal force either to a cannon or demi-cannon, culverin or demi-culverin, may be framed at the same price that one of these will amount to.

DEMI-CULVERIN. n. f. [demi and cul-verin.]

DEMI-CULVERIN of the lowest Size. A gun four inches two eighths diameter in the bore, and ten foot long. It carries a ball four inches diameter, and nine pounds weight.

DEMI-CULVERIN Ordinary. A gun four inches four eighths diameter in the bore, ten foot long. It carries a ball four inches two eighths diameter, and ten pounds eleven ounces weight.

Why he hath thus enslav'd my soul and body.

DEMI-GOD. n. f. [demi and god.] Partaking of divine nature; half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewell with tears, making temples to him as to a demigod.

Be gods, or angels, demi-gods.
Transfigured demigods stand round,
And men grow heroes at the sound,
E flamm'd with platy's charms.

N. y. half in heaven, except (what's mighty can)

A fit of vapours clouds this demigod.

DEMI-LANCE. n. f. [demi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

DEMURENESS. n. f. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; subornels; gravity of aspect. Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMURAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMURER. n. f. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.] A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law; if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge with his associates proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is their stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the sergeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Corwell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurer. Asylife's Paragon.

DEN. n. f. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They peep disperse, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens, and caves, under the earth. Mander.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

Why, shall they seek the lion in his den, And fright him there? Shakespeare.
The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,

Was now th' apartment of the royal dame; The cavern, only to her father known, By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryden.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes; In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gibson's Camden.

DENY. n. f. [a word formed between deny and say.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say, My love can give no place, bide no deny. Shakespeare.

DENDROLOGY. n. f. [δένδρον and λογος.] The natural history of trees.

DENIABLE. adj. [from deny.] That may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENIAL. n. f. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more imudent to deny, whose proofs were not his self; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of eye, avowing his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial: I must and will have Catherine to my wife. Shakespeare.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.

Her, at every such attempt, is repell'd With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South.

DENIER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

1. One that deposes his testimony in a court of justice; an evidence; a witness.

2. [In grammar.] Such verbs as have no active voice are called deponents, and generally signify action only: as, furor, I confess. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

TO DEPO'PULATE. v. a. [depopulo, Latin.] To unpeople; to lay waste; to destroy inhabited countries.

Where is this city,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man hunted? Shakespeare.
He turned his arms upon unarmed and unprovided people, to spoil only and depopulate, contrary to the laws both of war and peace. Bacon.

A land exhausted to the last remains.
Depopulated towns and barren plains. Dryden.
Grim death, in different shapes,
Depopulates the nations; thousands fall
His victims. Philips.

DEPOPULATION. n. f. [from depopulate.]
The act of unpeopling; havock; waste; destruction of mankind.

How didst thou grieve them, Adam! to behold
The end of all thy offspring, end to sad, Depopulation! Three another flood,
Of tears and sorrow a flood, thee also drown'd,
And sunk thee as thy sons. Milton.
Remote thou hear'st the dire effect of war,
Depopulation. Philips.

DEPOPULATOR. n. f. [from depopulate.]
A depopler; a destroyer of mankind; a waster of inhabited countries.

TO DEPO'RT. v. a. [deporter, French.]

1. Transportation; exile into a remote part of the dominion, with prohibition to change the place of residence.
2. Exile in general.

An deportation, which is a deportation forever into a foreign land, was anciently with us a civil death. A. J. F.

DEPO'RTMENT. n. f. [deportement, Fr.]
1. Conduct; management; manner of acting.

I will but sweep the way with a few notes touching the duke's own deportment in that stand. Wotton.

2. Demeanour; behaviour.
The conduct of his temper, and the gravity of his deportment, carried him safe through many difficulties, and he lived and died in a great station. Swift.

TO DEPOSE. v. a. [depono, Latin.]
1. To lay down; to lodge; to let fall.

It has been neither advanced, one jot further into the sea, nor its surface raised by additional men deposed upon it by the yearly inundations of the tide. Woodward.

DEP

2. To degrade from a throne or high station.

First of the king: what shall of him become?
—The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose. Shakespeare.

May your sick fame still languish till it die;
Then, as the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpin'd be depos'd, and after live. Dryden.
Depos'd captives, and captive princes, might have preceded him. Tatler.

3. To take away; to divest; to strip off.
Not in use.

You may my glory and my state depose.
But not my griefs; still am I king of those. Shakespeare.

4. To give testimony; to attest.
I was he that made you to depose;
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous. Shakespeare.
It was usual for him that dwelt in Southwark, or Tooting-district, to depose the yearly rent or valuation of lands lying in the north, or other remote part of the realm. Bacon.

5. To examine any one on his oath. Not in use.
According to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause. Shakespeare.

Love straight flew up and depos'd, a lie could not come from the mouth of Zelmira. Shakespeare.

DEPO'SITARY. n. f. [depositarius, Latin.]
One with whom any thing is lodged in trust.

I gave you all
—Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation, to be follow'd
With such a number. Shakespeare.

TO DEPO'SITE. v. a. [depositem, Latin.]
1. To lay up; to lodge in any place.

The eagle got leave here to deposite her eggs. Le Beau.
Dryden wants a poor square foot of stone, to show where the ashes of one of the greatest poets on earth are deposited. Garrick.
When vessels were open, and the insects had free access to the aliment within them, Rodis dis-tinguently observed, that no other species were produced, but of such as he saw go in and feed, and deposite their eggs there, which they would readily do in all putrefaction. Bentley.

2. To lay up as a pledge, or security.
3. To place at interest.

God commands us to return, as to him, to the poor, his gifts out of mere duty and thankfulness; not to deposite them with him in hopes of getting by them. Spencer.

4. To lay aside.

The difficulty will be to persuade the depositing of those facts which have, by I know not what fascination, so endeared themselves.

Decay of Piety.
DEPO'SITE. n. f. [depositum, Latin.]
1. Any thing committed to the trust and care of another.

2. A pledge; a pawn; a thing given as a security.

3. The state of a thing pawned or pledged.

They had five Marcenkes, and fairly left it:
they had the other day the Valtellina, and now have put it in deposits. Bacon.

DEPOSITION. n. f. [from depositio, Latin.]
1. The act of giving public testimony.

If you will remove the veracity of the fathers by these circumstances usually considered in depositions, you will find them living on their feet. Sir K. Digby.

A witness is obliged to swear, otherwise his deposition is not valid. Arbuckle's Paragon.

2. The act of degrading a prince from sovereignty.

3. [In canon law.] Deposition properly signifies a solemn depriving of a man of his clerical orders. Arbuckle's Paragon.

DEPO'SITORY. n. f. [from deposito.] The place where any thing is lodged. Depository is properly used of persons, and depository of places; but in the following example they are confounded.

The Jews themselves are the depositories of all the prophecies which tend to their own confusion. Arbuckle.

DEPRAVATION. n. f. [depravatio, Lat.]
1. The act of making any thing bad; the act of corrupting; corruption.

The three forms of government have their several perfections, and are subject to their several depravations; however, few states are ruined by defect in their institution, but generally by corruption of manners. Swift.

2. The state of being made bad; degeneracy; depravity.

We have a catalogue of the blackest sins that human nature, in its highest depravation, is capable of committing. Southey.

3. Defamation; censure: a sense not now in use.

Scabrous critics are apt, without a theme
For depravation, to square all the sex. Southey.

TO DEPRAVE. v. a. [depravo, Latin.]
To vitiate; to corrupt; to contaminate.

We admire the providence of God in the continuance of scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics to deprave, the same. Blount.

Who lives that's not depraved, or depraved? Shakespeare.

But from me what can proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will depraved? Milton.

A taste which plenty does deprave,
Loaths lawful goods, and loathes all does crave. Dryden.

DEPRAVEDNESS. n. f. [from deprave.]
Corruption; taint; contamination; vitiated state.

What this do you mean? Our original depravedness, and proneness of our eternal part: all evil. Hume.

DEPRAVEMENT. n. f. [from deprave.]
A vitiated state; corruption.

He maketh men believe, that apparitions are either deceptions of sight, or melancholy depravements of fancy. Bacon.

DEPRAVER. n. f. [from deprave.] A corrupter; he that causes depravity.

DEPRAVITY. n. f. [from deprave.] Corruption; a vitiated state.

TO DEPRECATE. v. a.
1. To beg off; to pray deliverance from; to avert by prayer.

In deprecating evil, we make an humble acknowledgment of guilt, and of God's justice in chastising, as well as clemency in sparing the guilty. Giles.

Forcely indeed, in all its degrees, men accally persuaded to deprave from themselves. Agassiz.

The judgments which we would deprave all not removed. Smith.

The Italian entered them in his prayer;
amongst the three evils he petitioned to be delivered from, he might have depraved great evils. Baker's History of Learning.

2. To implore mercy of; this is not proper.

At length he sets
Those dots, whose points make gods adore
His might, and deprave his power. Pope.

DEPRECATION. n. f. [deprecatio, Latin.]
1. Prayer against evil.

1. A draining of waters; a turning of its course.

When the water began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice that the derivation of the word Substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology.

3. The transmission of any thing from its source.

As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation.

5. The thing deduced or derived. Not used.

Most of them are the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to.

DERIVATIVE. adj. [derivative, Latin.] Derived or taken from another.

As it is a derivative perfection, so it is a distinct kind of perfection from that which is in God.

DERIVATIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] The thing or word derived or taken from another.

For honour, 'Tis a derivative from me to mine, And only that I stand for.

The word Honour originally and strictly signifies no more than creditable, and is but a derivative from Honour, which signifies credit or honour.

DERIVATIVELY. adv. [from derivative.] In a derivative manner.

TO DERIVE. v. a. [derivare, Fr. from derivare, Latin.]

1. To turn the course of water from its channel.

Company lessens the shame of vice by sharing it, and abates the torrent of a common odium by deriving it into many channels.

2. To deduce; as from a root, from a cause, from a principle.

They endeavour to derive the varieties of colours from the various proportion of the direct progress of motion of these globules to their circumsolution, or motion about their own centre.

Men derive their ideas of duration from their reflection on the train of ideas they observe to succeed one another in their own understandings.

From these two causes of the laxity and rigidity of the fibres, the methodists, an ancient set of physicians, derived all diseases of human bodies with a great deal of reason; for the fluids derive their qualities from the solids.

3. To communicate to another, as from the origin and source.

Christ having Adam's nature as we have, but incorrupt, derived not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from his own person, unto all that belong unto him.

4. To derive by transmission.

This property seems rather to have been derived from the pretorian soldiers.

The censures of these wretches, who, I am sure, could derive no sanctity to them from their own persons; yet, upon this account, that they had been consecrated by the offering incense in them, were, by God's special command, liquefied from all common use.

5. To communicate to by descent of blood.

Besides the readiness of parts, an excellent disposition of mind is derived to your lordship from the parents of two generations, to whom I have the honour to be known.

6. To spread; to diffuse gradually from one place to another.

The streams of the public justice were diffused into every part of the kingdom.

7. [In grammar.] To trace a word from its origin.

TO DERIVE. v. n.

1. To come from; to owe its origin to.

He that refits the power of Prulemy, Refits the pow'r of heav'n; for pow'r from heav'n Derives, and monarchs rule by gods appointed.

2. To descend from.

I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he, As well posset.

DERIVER. n. f. [from derive.] One that draws or fetches, as from the source or principle.

Such a one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but also a deriver of the whole entire guilt of them to himself.

DERM. adj. [derm, Saxon.]

1. Sad; solitary.

2. Barbarous; cruel. Obsolete.

DERNIER. adj. Last. It is a mere French word, and used only in the following phrase.

In the Imperial Chamber, the term for the prosecution of an appeal is not circumscribed by the term of one or two years, as the law elsewhere requires in the empire; this being the dernier resort and supreme court of judicature.

TO DEROGATE. v. a. [derogare, Latin.]

1. To do an act so far contrary to a law or custom, as to diminish its former extent: distinguished from abrogate.

By several contrary customs and statutes used here, many of those civil and canon laws are controuled and derogated.

2. To lessen the worth of any person or thing; to disparage.

TO DEROGATE. v. n.

1. To detract; to lessen reputation: with from.

We should be injurious to virtue itself, if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great.

2. To degenerate; to act beneath one's rank, or place, or birth.

Is there no derogation in 't?

—You cannot derogate, my lord.

DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

How her worth convey sterility;

Dry up in her the organs of increase,

And from her degenerate body never spring

A babe to honour her!

DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a winking ambassage, with good respects, to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly from.

When, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became far sorer after relating to maintain.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no disparage.

The wisest princes need not ask it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel.

I lay not take in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise.

None of these painters will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Latin.] Detracting; lessening the honour of. Not in use.

That spirit is corporeal, seems to me a consistent derogation to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of insensations, amulets, and charms.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.]

In a detracting manner.

DEROGATONINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.]

The act of derogating.

DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Lat.]

Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divines.

DERVIS. n. f. [derwis, French.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsafed to teach,

These dervises dare an impudent preach.

The dervise at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince.

DES-CANT. n. f. [des-canto, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat.

And may the canon'd wain too harsh a strain.

The wicket night male

All right to a new and delicate tune.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,

And stand between two cloutenmen, good my lord.

For on that ground I'll build a holy desert.

Kindness would supplant our unkind report-

ings, and fierce dignities upon our lips.

To DE-S-CANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts

- we had a lot of trouble along with the road
At this point

This essence to incarnate and institute. William.

- DISC. 1. 1. 1. [from Argemone] that describes.

From a plantation and colony, an island near Spain was by the Greek describers named Erythraea.

DESCRIBE. n. f. [from the verb.] A discoverer; a detector.

The glad describer shall not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss.

DESCRIPTION. n. f. [description, Lat.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.

A poet must relate all tedious and unnecessary circumstances as a tale which is too heavy, is less pleasant than a burthen.

Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortally'd in song,
And listen in silence and oblivion lie,
Pursuing their mountains, and their channels
day.

There is but over by the muse's skill,
And the smooth description marmur still.

3. A kind of fiction.

The act of definition, which is made up of a number of terms, the most remarkable part of which is called an imperfect definition, whereas the definition is called perfect, when it is composed of the essential elements, and is general in nature in general.

The qualities expressed in a descrip- tion, are the describers, and define the bond,

And the describers are the describers.

DESCRY. v. a. [descrier, Fr.]

To give notice of any thing in plain language; as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach.

This descrier is now obsolete, but gave notice to those which are now in use.

4. To spy out; to examine at a distance.

A descrier of the land, or of the sea.

Followed, I think, is gone to descrier,
The strength of the enemy.

Our descrier, to a great degree,
The strength of the enemy.

To find out; to find out any thing concealed.

On the king they got a sight, after descrier,
And of the queen they got a sight.

5. To discover; to perceive by the eye;

to see any thing distant or obscure.

Look'd into the court he took his way,
Through the guard, which never had descrier,
And through the watchmen, whom he never descrier.

The light of deep prophecy the bath;
What's past, and what's to come the can descrier.

That planet would, unto our eyes, descrier,
Only the part whereon the light falls, appear to be followed, as the moon seems.

And now their way to earth they had descrier,
In Paradise first tending.

Although the moon of light be not descrier,
No element can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body.

A tower so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
And on the roof, from whence we could descrier,
A throne.

On a more at least look back, said I;
Thou' in that large glass descrier.

DISCOVER. n. f. [from the verb.] Discovery; thing discovered.

How soon is the other army
Near, and on speedy foot, the main descrier
Stands in the happy thought.

TO DESECRATE. v. a. [desacer, Lat.]

To divert from the purpose to which any thing is consecrated.

The four days of monasteries imprecated evildoers those who should desecrate their donations.

DESECRATION. n. f. [from desecrate.]

The abolition of consecration.

DESERT. n. f. [desertum, Lat.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.

Be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword.
If trembling I inhibit, then protect me.
The baby of a girl.

He, looking round on every side, I heard
A pathless desert, dark with bound shades.

DESERT. adj. [desertus, Latin.] Wild;

waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untill'd.

I have words
That would be howl'd out on the desert,
Where learning the first time, even them.

He found him in a desert land, and in waste howling wilderness.

The promises and bargains between two men in a desert land are binding to them, for they are perfectly available in nature, in respect to the desert.

TO DESERT. v. a. [deserter, French;

deserte, Latin.]

1. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously.

I have not much to say of deserters, who desert with a good conscience, but I have to say of those who desert with a bad conscience.

2. To leave; to abandon.

When a man deserts, he leaves the army,
the company, the family, or the country, without any reason or excuse.

3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

DESERTER. n. f. [properly deserte; the word is originally French.] The latest; the traitor or desertion with which a fact is concluded.

DESERV. n. f. [from deserve.]

1. Quality or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.

He is of the deserve of a reward, or of a punishment, who has done good, or evil, and is entitled to it, with equal right to the reward, or the punishment, as the desert.

The tale of the mount
Is rank'd with a deserve, all kind of virtues,
That is the foundation of this sphere.

To propagate their deserve.

Unhappy man after his deserve, and with the deserve of his deserve.

2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.

As a reward implies an equality between the good intended, and the good deserved, or made due.

3. Excellence; right of reward; virtue.

Take my deserve to him, and him them from me.

DESERTER. n. f. [from deserte.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post: commonly in an ill sense.

The members of both deserters, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and out of their places in part ancient.

Straight to their ancient cells, recall'd from the desert.

The reconcil'd deserters will repair.

Holds of deserters, who your honour bids,
And bafely broke your faith for bribes of gold.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.

They are the deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemy's.

A deserter, who came out of the camp, says
the garrison is brought to the smallest of cells.

3. He that forsakes another; an aban-doner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserters in their power, would certainly have them in more mercy than the deserters did on the deserters.

Thou, false guardian of a child, too good,
Thou mean deserter, thou brother's blood.

DESEATION. n. f. [from desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by only, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other.

2. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

It is a desertion of the faith, with the false apostles of the desertion, or the desertion, of some of the desertion.

DESERTER. adj. [from desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

Let me deserter, who with shame confess,
Another deserter had laid upon my breast.

TO DESERVE. v. a. [deserve, Fr.] To be worthy of either good or ill.

He who deserves, as having power to work or evil, as much as he deserves.

Some deserve to be well, and even to deserve to be your deserter, and good name.

All friends shall be
The wages of the deserter, and all foes
The wages of the deserter.

What is the deserve of you and me deserter.

Yet well, if here would end
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear
My own deserve.

A deserter is a deserter, and would bear
The deserve of the deserter, and would bear

DES

Their love is never link'd to the desire,
Till his debts are paid. Shakespeare.
Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great desires do, perchance, grow intolerable pretensions.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers. Dryden.

DESICCANTS n. f. [from deficcate.] Applications that dry up the flow of forces;
driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and wadded.

TO DESICCATE. v. a. [deficco, Lat.]

1. To dry up; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies it operates by heat or age, when the nature ignites gently with, and the moisture with it,
the air with time getteth into the pores. Raie.
Sensual fermentations were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places there, by the heat of the sun. Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluity, there were subjects to desiccate and desiccate
the moisture. Bacon.

DESICCATION. n. f. [from deficcate.]
The act of making dry; the state of being dried.

If the fluids issue out of the body, there fol-loweth desiccation, induration, and consumption. Bacon.

DESICCATIVE. adj. [from deficcate.]
That has the power of drying.

TO DESIDERATE. v. a. [desidero, Lat.]
To want; to miss; to desire in absence.
A word scarcely used.

Exemples are of woman's distance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderate problem. Chrysom.

DESIDERATUM. [Latin.] Somewhat which inquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover; as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation. The tri-section of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESIDIOS. adj. [desidiosus, Lat.] Idle;
lazy; heavy. Dist.

TO DESIGN. v. a. [designo, Lat. designe, French.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose; with fin.

The acts of religion and worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a Being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we. Stillingfleet.

You are not for designing by design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally: with to.

One of these places was designed by the old man to his son. Clarendon.
He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune: he was designed to the study of the law. Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.
We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artisans will, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured; which be the two general heads. Watson.

Thus while they spread their pace, the prince designed.

The new elected lay, and draws the lines. Dryd.

5. To mark out by particular tokens.
Little used.

DES

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs. Locke.

DESIGN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life? Tilghson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A fedute settled designs upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endravours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek masters, one may offend the hand of an Ape less or Protophene. Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DESIGNABLE. adj. [designo, Latin.] Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited:
the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant. Dugly.

DESIGNATION. n. f. [designatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plan designatio of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment: direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a triuphal pretence, grounded up in the will and designa- tion of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designatio on only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESIGNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadverttently; not fortuitously.

Utes made thus go; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Great In.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain, but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour. Locke.

DESIGNER. n. f. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes;
a purposer.

2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private.
Deacy of Pitty.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESIGNING. participial adj. [from design.]
Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; frau-dulently artful.

DES

'Twould show me poor, indebted, and con-pell'd.

Designing, mercenary; and I know
You would not wish to think I could be bought. Scutcheon.

DESIGNLESS. adj. [from design.] Without intention; without design; unknow-ing; inadvertent.

DESIGNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as distinct as the conditions of the respective fingers. Bye.

DESIGNMENT. n. f. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Deacy of Pitty.

'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of desig- nating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glancville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords! our wars are done!
The desperate tempest hath to bang'd the Turks,
That their designments halt. Shakespeare.

She received advice both of the king's desig- nate estate, and of the duke's designment regard her. Hayward.

3. The idea, or sketch, of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on board and canvass, but shall that excuse the in-painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his sight,
For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the late designment was his own. Dryd.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great fidelity, will improve his mind toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought. Bacon.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of the will. Regin.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one; being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes. Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watson.

DESIRE. n. f. [desir, Fr. desiro, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the weakness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it. Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Scutcheon.

Desire is the vast extent of human mind;
It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind. Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the soul, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desiro, French;
desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold. Dante.

To express wishes; to appear to long.
Love behest is with a desiring look. Dryden.

To ask; to intreat.

Sir, I treat you home with me to dinner.
—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night. Shakespeare.

But since you take such interest in our woe,
And Troy's disastrous end desire to know,
I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell
What in our last and fatal night befell. Dryden.

To require; to demand. Not in use.

A delicate cake desires a dolful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments. Spenser.

DESIRER. n. f. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.

I will counterfeited the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the others. Shakespeare.

DESIROUS. adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desirous to please, and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hobbes.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs.

Men are drowsy and desirous to sleep, as the bit of an ass, and yawn and stretch. Bacon.

Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of earth-flowers a garland. Milton.

Conjugal affection,
Fostering over her and immortal doubt,
Hath of me on desirous to behold
Of me a face. Milton.

DESIROUSLY. adv. [from desirous.] Eagerly;
with desire; with ardent wishes.

DESIROUSNESS. n. f. [from desirous.]
Fulness of desire; eagerness. Diss.

DESIST. v. n. [desisto, Latin.] To cease from any thing; to stop; with from.

Desist, thou art decreed,
And thou art vain, nor art in vain decreed. Milton.

There are many who will not quit a project though they find it pernicious or absurd, but will not desist from it, when they are convinced it is unprofitable. Addison.

DESISTANCE. n. f. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.

Men usually give labour where they have not proportion, and make it both the motive and cause of their desistance from giving any more.
They have given already. Bacon.

DESISTE. adj. [desiste, Latin.] Ending; concluding; final.

Keep your desiste propositions are of this kind: the less variety as the sun takes, but the fewer not yet begun to vanish, therefore the less not yet seen. Watts.

DESK. n. f. [disch, a table, Dutch.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or repository under it.

Tell her in the desk,
That's covered o'er with Turkish tapestry.
There is a purse of ducats. Shakespeare.

He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him. Watts's Angler.

I have been obliged to leave unfinished in my last the heads of two essays. Bope.

Not the desk with lives and
Not the desk with despatches, write
Not the desk with despatches, write
To writing of good sense. Swift.

DESOLATE. adj. [desolatus, Latin.]
1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.

Let us seek some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakespeare.

This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Brown.

2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.

This city will be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer.

3. Solitary; without society.

To DESOLATE. v. a. [desolo, Latin.]
To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste; to make desert.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge. Bacon.

Thick around
Thunders the sport of the sea, who with the gun,
And deep desolate sounding at the bow,
Waste than the sea on desolate the heads. Thomson.

DESOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.

DESOLATION. n. f. [from desolate.]
1. Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.

What was the desolation of the country, what with a desolation of the lamentable desolation therein made by the Scots, you have heard me with a desolation of compassion. Spenser.

With a desolation follows to myself and thee,
Hertell, the lonely, and many a cruel an' cruel,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakespeare.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy;
destitution.

That desolation place is unnatural to mankind;
and then the terrible of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, eye and the ear reaching up images before it, dark still in the mind, even when it is best and clear of itself. Spenser.

Then your desolation shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a desolation of Shakespeare.

My desolation does begin to make A desolation. Shakespeare.

To complete
The scene of desolation, the child around
The desolation of the child. Thomson.

3. A place wasted and forsaken.

How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! Jer.

DESPAIR. n. f. [despeir, French.]
1. Hopelessness; dependence; loss of hope.

Despair is the thought of the unattainability of any good, which works differently in men's minds, sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolence. Locke.

You had rather never attempted this change, for on such hope; as never discovered a hope with despair. Spenser.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed;
we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor.

Wretched, forsaken, and pursued at last,
All safety in despair of safety placed,
Courage be thence resumes, refusal to be it
All their faults, since 'tis in vain to leave. Donkey.

Equal in despair, unequal was their care;
One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair. Dequon.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,
All such and serious, pitiful to the eye;
The more despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden flasp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.

Are not all of most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extinction? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other; may not hope in God, or good nature, be perverted into persecution or despair. Spenser.

To DESPAIR. v. n. [despero, Latin.] To be without hope; to despond; with of before a noun.

Though thou drewst a sword at thy head
yet despair out; for there may be a turning. Job.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despise of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver. Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun. Watts.

Though thou drewst a sword at thy head
yet despair out; for there may be a turning. Job.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despise of making of gold, but are mad upon
making of silver. Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun. Watts.

DESPA'IRER. n. f. [from despair.] One without hope.

He enters the sea-fall, and commends the bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success. Dryden.

DESPA'IRFUL. adj. [despair and fall.]
Hopeless. Obsolete.

That despair but four despairful care. Spenser.

Other despair amongst the despairful care of the Seymour bath despair as the despairful care of their bath despair of despairful care. Spenser.

DESPA'IRINGLY. adv. [from despairing.]
In a manner betokening hopelessness or despondency.

He speaks despairingly of our society. Bible.

To DESPA'TCH. v. a. [despatcher, Fr.]
1. To send away hastily.

Doctor Despatcher Culeb, a sober man, despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring the money, and learn the exact method of using it. Temple.

The good Despatcher, while despatched care
I despatched care, and despatched care.

Despatched Despatcher to the despatcher care,
To give a despatcher of the despatcher care. Dryden.

2. To send out of the world; to put to death.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pay of his misery, to despatch
His knighted life. Shakespeare.

And the company shall despatch them with flowers, and despatch them with their words. Herb.

To despatch, but two of you will fall;
And we despatch we will despatch you all. Dryden.

Despatch me quickly, I may death despatch;
I shall grow tender else, and wish to live. Dryden.

3. To perform a business quickly; as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.
I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.
I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.
I despatched my affairs, and ran hither. Locke.

No despatcher in one despatcher, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another despatcher is ready to set us on work. Locke.

4. To conclude an affair with another.

—They have despatched with despatcher; he is gone. Shakespeare.

DESPA'IR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.

Advised despatch is one of the most despatcher things to business that can be. Bacon.

You'd see, could you her despatcher motions
watch,
Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;
Then to a woman's meaning would you look,
Then read on backward. Granville.

The despatcher of a good office is very often as beneficial to the despatcher as the good office itself. Adams.

2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.

You that put
This night's great despatch into my despatch, Which shall, to all our rights and days to come,
Give solely sovereign sway and mastery. Shakespeare.

3. Express; hasty messenger or messenger;
as, despatches were sent away.

D-E-S

3. Simply to strip. Not in use.

A groom can despoil
Of puissant arms, and laid in easy bed. Spenser.

DESPOLIATION. n. f. [from despolio, Lat.]
The act of despoiling or stripping.

TO DESPOND. v. n. [despondo, Lat.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any misadventures or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation.

L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane.
The learned leeches in despond despair,
And lose their heads, depending of their art.

Others despond their own minds, despond at every difficulty; and conclude, that making no progress in knowledge, rather than leaving the ordinary business, is above their capacities.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of his nature, or such a vice: he is well apprized of the representation of some of these things by conscience the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the foolish, if he is in danger the desponding mind.

Harris.

DESPONDENCY. n. f. [from despondens, Lat.]
Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPONDENT. adj. [despondens, Lat.]
Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It was known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very bolded atheists, out of ridicule and company, when they chance to be conversed with solitude or sickness, are the most desponding, timorous, and desponding wretches in the world. Harris.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, fit
On the dead tree, a dull desponding flock.

DESPONSATE. v. n. [desponso, Lat.] To betroth; to affiancer; to enter by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPOSION. n. f. [from desposui, Lat.]
The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DESPOT. n. f. [despota, Lat.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince;
the despot of Servia.

DESPOTIC. adj. [from despot] Absolute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unac-countable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despot power.
Over his female in due awe,
Not from that right to part an hour,
Said the lawgiver.

Alfred.

VOL. I.

To all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though his command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of confining and despotical. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotical prince; for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Adams.

Despots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotical slavery. Grave.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. f. [from despotical]
Absolute authority.

DESPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, French;
from despot] Absolute power.

TO DESPUMATE. v. n. [despumo, Latin.] To throw off parts in foam; to froth; to work.

DESPUMATION. n. f. [from despumate]
The act of throwing off excrementitious parts in scum or foam.

DESPUMATION. n. f. [from squama, Lat.]
The act of scaling foul bones. A term of chirurgery.

DESSERT. n. f. [deserte, French] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine desert. De Witt.
At your desert bright power comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. Keats.

TO DESTINATE. v. a. [destino, Lat.]
To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destin'd to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ross.

DESTINATION. n. f. [from destinate] The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular course without losing their way. Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Harris.

TO DESTINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?

Say they who counsel war, we are deserv'd,
Reverend, and destin'd to eternal war.
Whatever doing, what can we justly more?

Milton.

All stars flame, before each star has set,
Dimin'd in his glory, he destin'd to set.

Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too much blood flows into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destin'd to carry humours secreted from the blood. Boerhaave.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or military; used absolutely.

May heav'n around this right old head
The church of deserv'd secure. Pope.

4. To fix unalterably.

The interval judge's dreadful power
From the dark den shall throw thy destin'd hour.

Pope.

DESTINY. n. f. [destinie, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy fire or dam;
But, like a foul mis-shapen mimic,
Mark'd by the destin'd to be avoided. Shakespeare.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can join the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is tied to Jove's eternal seat?

Fairy Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they were free.

Willing or no, who will for what they must
By destiny, and to no other cause. Milton.

Had my great lord not been destin'd to it,
To know, as well as power to act, her will.

Darwin.

Which forms of causes both whatever shall be,
By destiny.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron Meet me in the morning; together we Will come to know his destiny. Shakespeare.

DESTITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned; with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either of nature or grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure.

Hall.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will require the power of the destitute, and not despoil him of it. Lyons.

3. In want of.

Take the deserv'd way

To find the regions destitute of day. De Witt.

Nothing can be a greater influence of the love that mankind has for liberty, than that a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campanian or Rume, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Adams.

DESTITUTION. n. f. [from destitute]

Want; the state in which something is wanted; applied to persons.

That destitute in food and clothing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, sufficiency not the mind of man to admit any other care.

Hobbes.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly a man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hobbes.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is first made by the civil laws of a kingdom; in appointing or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the debt, and the special obligations of friendship. Locke.

TO DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Lat. de- struo, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to ruin a building to ruin.

The Lord will destroy the tower of the strong, and will bring down the high fortification.

2. To lay waste; to make desolate.

Solomon destroyed the city of Tyre, and made it a desolation. Keble.

3. To kill.

A people good and true, and all as the Angels, but the Lord will bring them down from the heaven, and they shall be cast down from the Lord. De Witt.

4. To put an end to; to bring to naught.

The wife Proserpine hath placed a curse
Upon the earth, and all the things that grow there, which shall be the cause of their destruction, though they be as good as food, as the peacock and the snake and adder, the wasp, the bee, and the spider, flies, and some sorts of fish, and others. Shakespeare.

5. To put an end to; to bring to naught.

Shakespeare.

DEVISE. n. f. [devise, a will, old Fr.]

1. The act of giving or bequeathing by will.

This word is properly attributed, in our common law, to him that bequeaths his goods by will but will or bequeathment in writing, and the reason is, because to testate is a legal act, and only to be devise, by this act are distributed into many parts.

The alienation is made by devise in a last will only, and the kind of it is, if it is in the demandable.

2. Contrivance. See DEVISE.

God hath omitted nothing to do to his purpose, nor will he be hindered to be accomplished by our devise.

TO DEVISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To grant by will. A law term.

DEW. n. f. [deap, Saxon; dautes
Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

If you wish we frequently observe after tempests, and in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which day, as was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening. But the sun then being above the horizon, it being at the face of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not at first the fine being now gone off, the vapour rises at and near the earth, and descends to the soil till it is so thick as to be easily visible thereon; and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent,
which is usually about the middle of the night,
it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes.
Hudson.

Never yet did I see in bed
Did I enjoy the golden ease of sleep,
But with a thousand dreams was still awak'd.
Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, inded;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls early where.
Shakespeare.

As morning comes newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare.

vapours condensed.
Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.
Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to be-dew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dew which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dew'd been with timely rain. Fairy Q.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

Or so much as it needs

To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Shakespeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears.
Shakespeare.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears.

Without the vent of words which these he breath'd.
Milton.

Polemon above the rest appears
In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears.
Dryden.

In Gahlek blood again

He dews his reeking sword, and stows the ground

With headless ranks.
Phelps.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]

Deberrium, as it ev' stand here among the

DIE

DIA

Who would believe that there were mountain rears
Dew-like baits, whose throats had hanging at them.

Waters of flesh? Shak. Lear.
The dew of heaven shall flow down along the plains,
With its own bow to torment in every vein. Gas.

DEW-WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.]
A worm found in dew.

For the most, the dew-worm, which some call the dew-worm, and the branching, are the chief of them. Platow.

Dewy. adj. [from dew.]
1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.
From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adve se winds,
Sublim'd from dew's vapours in mid air,
Fledge with hoar'd thaws, and scathed bare Rears stormy. Shak. Lear.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.
The roscid dew, 'gainst early morn,
And late Aurora from the east
Of aged Fethers, and the dewy red
With rosy cheeks, for there as bathing red Spoke.

The dew with which the dew,
That at her dawning with the dew,
And the water with the dew,
With which the dew with the dew,
Bathed the dew with the dew. Milton.

His dew, his dew, his dew, Ambrosia. Milton.
Besides the factor which cold Aeneas yields,
The dew of Hercules and the dew of the dew.

DEXTER. adj. [Latin.] The right;
not the left. A term used in heraldry.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Lat.]
1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.
2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading mortal peril, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers when they press'd him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them as far off. Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted and dexterity. Shak.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors.
Shak.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready; as, a dexterous workman.

For both their dextrous hands the lance and shield. Pope.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves.
Locke.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.]
Expertly; skilfully; artfully.

The magister sometimes cannot do his own office dextrously, but by acting the minister.
Locke.

But when my study was to eng the dice,
A dextrous hand throw the lucky die. Deben.

DIXIAL. adj. [dexter, Latin.] The right; not the left.

As for the dextrous hand, which should under the left hand managing the dextral parts, we must not once in it divided its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its virtue and proper velity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIXIALITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left side.

If there were a determinate propensity in the right, and such as arith from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differentiated by dextrality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIABETES. n. f. [diabētēs.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colloquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colloquations; as in fluxes, hectic tweaks and coughs, diabetes, and other confusions. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIABOLICAL. adj. [from diabolus, DIABOLUS. Latin.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

They, in other beasts obnoxious,
Dread might beget of him a power,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milton.

Demon is the antithesis, the enemy, and the reveler, that man know very well, that the devil of blood, and affection of damnation by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise,
and they that use it are the devil's children. Deben.

Damned spirits must needs be an enemy, despair, and rage; and have in much of a diabolical nature in them, as to with all men to share their misery. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIACODIUM. n. f. [diacodi.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACOSMOS. n. f. [diakosmos.] The doctrine of sounds.

DIADEM. n. f. [diadēma, Latin.]
1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The tiara diadem in place of crown,
And purple robe girded with many a wound
Spoke.

A hit the coblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence his plume the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Shak. Lear.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,
Golden in show, is but a wreath of thorns,
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights.

To him who wears the regal diadem Milton.
Why should I care then that diadem
From my grey temples, which the hand of time Must thus to part me has? Deben's Vulgar Errors.

Faithful, at once made diadem her prey,
And kept our price in his triumphant way,
Fled like a snail before his radiant day. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIADEMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not, when I am thus array'd divine, Touch'd with the name that breaks from virtue's flour. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

Her priestly mitre forbids the good to die,
And opens the temple of eternity. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIADROM. n. f. [diadromos.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A day is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum's whole diadrom, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

ration or disjunction of syllables; as diar.

DIAGNOSTIC. n. f. [diagnostikos.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house, as us hear your diagnostics. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnostics. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [diagonalis.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The multiplicity of the badger is ill-computed, and with some disadvantage; the shortness of his fixed upon the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the legs of both. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

All sorts of stone computed of granules, cut and rise in any direction, as well as a penpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally, and parallel to the side of the stone. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIA'GONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of a line, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch longer, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into certain number of equal parts. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by phresicles according to common acceptance, but by, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though it should be the right in one, which, upon constant sights, stands, altho' or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant emotion, the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIA'GRAM. n. f. [diagramma.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a formal demonstration in the mathematics; very ingenious in the diagram, but failing in the method of operation. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of their cogitative lines and angles, and draw there their properties of perception and apperception, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIAGRYDIATIS. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All choleric humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiat, mixed with castor, or some other or subtile powder. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shows the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness basely were to long;
Though life did ride upon a drop of point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour. Shak. Lear.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not;
we have no sense of the aggressive motion of point or animal; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover it more than that it is gone. Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the letters and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the dial-plate.
Deben's Vulgar Errors.

DIALECT. n. f. [diálekto.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret ring. Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men. Shakespeare.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALECTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.]

Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [dialecticus.]

Logic; the art of reasoning.

DIALING. n. f. [from dial.]

The sciatick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may show the hour.

DIALIST. n. f. [from dial.]

A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Mason.

DIALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.]

A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DIALOGUE. n. f. [διαλογος.]

A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo? Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked fellow! I know dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise:
He mov'd the mind, but had not power to raise. Dryden.

To DIALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To discourse with another; to confer.

Don't dialogue with thy shadow? Shakespeare.

DIALYSIS. n. f. [διαλυσις.]

The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.

DIAMETER. n. f. [δια and μετρον.]

The line which, passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a globe about, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Kepler.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw; it lies in form like a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Macaulay.

DIAMETRAL. adj. [from diameter.]

Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametral.]

According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposite to prophaneness and impiety of actions. Newton.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves. Gov. of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.]

In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his confidence and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the indense stratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. f. [diamant, Fr. adamant, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its varied splendour, and the brightness of its reflections.

It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely heated of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass-house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before.

but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brazil; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metallic particles. Woodward.

Give me the ring of mine you had at diamond.
Oh, for the diamond, the chain you promised. Shakespeare.

I see how this eye would emulate the diamond.
Thou hast the right angled bent of the bow. Shakespeare.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty, as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable than any other stone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
For as the star that shines in the moon, Shakespeare.

The lovely diamond that thy parent rays,
Collected light, compact. Shakespeare.

DIAPASE. n. f. [διαπασα.]

A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

A diapase is in Latin a quadrat was the Latin word for a square by seven and nine.

Now the compacted music a good diapase. Shakespeare.

The diapase is a chord including all tones, with which I went the wondrous winds to the And make a sound of pure pleasures. Shakespeare.

DIAPASON. n. f. [διαπασον.]

A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

A diapason is in Latin a quadrat was the Latin word for a square by seven and nine.

Now the compacted music a good diapason. Shakespeare.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [διαφανος.]

Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Amphic called upon a quality inherent in clay, to a diaphanous body. Kepler.

When he had taken off his feet, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Kepler.

DIAPHORETIC. adj. [διαφορετικος.]

Sudorific; promoting a diaphoresis of perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretic medicine, or a sudorific, is some thing that will provoke sweating. Watson.

Diaphoretic, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of secretion, because they cause the absorption of the elements of the body. Watson.

DIAPHANISM. n. f. [διαφανισμος.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

Hard dia

Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rife, many as sweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Craford.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. f. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damask, which her sweetest most
Is full of knowing of the fished time; Shakespeare.

Not any weaver, which his work doth bound
In diaper, in damask, or in lye, Shakespeare.

Might in their own eye be cunning ever dare
With this to curious pet-work to compare. Shakespeare.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rose-water, and be strew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shakespeare.

To DIAPER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the flowers be tender diaper should wrong,
The ground be strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd be the diaper'd mead. Shakespeare.

Flora used to cloath our grand-dame Earth
With a new livery, diaper'd with various flowers, and chequer'd with delightful objects. Howell.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon holes, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the halt; for reason tells you, that your field must cover some what uneven. Shakespeare.

DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from διαφανος.]

Transparency; pellucidity; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should also be closed, would be apt to grow dry and thick, and I to their diaphaneity; therefore are the eyes lids to contract as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glass and vacuum them over with the moisture they contain. Kepler.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [διαφανος and καινος.]

Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

A diaphanick is an element superior, and lighter than water, through which vast, open, solid, diaphanick, is transparent body, that is, afterward, created, calm, transparent. Kepler.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [διαφανος and καινος.]

Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Amphic called upon a quality inherent in clay, to a diaphanous body. Kepler.

When he had taken off his feet, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Kepler.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [διαφορετικος.]

Sudorific; promoting a diaphoresis of perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretic medicine, or a sudorific, is some thing that will provoke sweating. Watson.

Diaphoretic, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of secretion, because they cause the absorption of the elements of the body. Watson.

DIAPHANISM. n. f. [διαφανισμος.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

D I F

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Dress his sickness; for it is my office. Shalp.
Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile bidden ease;
Till, led by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had his occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath kept into my feast. Shalp.

3. To board; to supply with diet

To DIET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and cure;
Spare falls that oft with gods doth dine. Milton.

DIET-DRINK. n. f. [diet and drink]

Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The medicinal diet-drink is better than the diet-drink, or apothecary's medicines. Isid.

DIET. n. f. [from diet, an appointed day. Skinner; from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude, Junius.] An assembly of princes or climates.

An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal. Ralegh.

DIETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet.

DIETARY. n. f. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He taught our truth as Jingo had been sick,
And he her diet. Shalp.

DIETETICAL. adj. [from diet.] Re-

DIETETICK. } relating to diet; belong- ing to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetic caution, and such as culinary preference might have afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This book of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even lectures in the dietetic philosophy. Adelphi.

To DIFFER. v. n. [differe, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have pro- perties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and chance,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison's Misc.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear opponents differ, and know well within himself that while which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

Here uncontrolled you may in judgment sit;
Will never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In this party speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments.
Burnet's Theory.

D I F

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments.
Addison's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

DIFFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Ralegh.

Thus, to be noble, from virtue must begin
The difference that distinguishes man from man:
He claimed no title from descent of blood;
but it was, which made him noble, made him good. Devereux.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another, caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shalp.

On the strange difference of man and man!
To face a woman's service is due;
My fool usurps my body. Shalp. King Lear.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?—It was a contention in publick. Shalp.

He is weary of his life, that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after dawnlight. Saunders.

Nothing could have fallen out more unexpectedly than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Trotter.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Point in question; ground of contro- versy.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court? Shalp.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference; and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch
the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution, which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Devereux.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some differences of language or sense. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIFFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Men are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs which are commonly observed, and are distinguished by other concurrent causes. Holder.

Oras's difference with a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness. Ray.

D I F

We see nothing that differentiates the courage of Minotaurus from that of Serpethus. Erg.

DIFFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where different food and soil Profound diffempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the eyes, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dunciad.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERENTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be; and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius. Addison.

DIFFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a face may remit the light to different parts, and vary a colour. Philips.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvi- ous. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor matter, is of as difficult apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glant's Misc.

Latin was not more difficult
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficult in granting the dispensation, drew out it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficult.] Dif- ficulty to be persuaded; incomppliance; impracticability. A word not in use, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or forwardness, or apprise to oppose, or difficulty, or the like;
but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief. Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facil.

It is difficult to the eyes of the people. Zachary.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DIFFICULTY. adv. [from difficult.]

Hardly, with difficulty; not easily.

A man, who has always indulging a trouble in the full enjoyment of his station, will with difficulty be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

DIF

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficilis, French.]

Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities; a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of the truth of their convictions do them no good. South.

Difficulties; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat. Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addison on Italy.

Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. South.

DIFFIDE. v. n. [from diffido, Latin.]

To distrust; to have no confidence in.

The woman did the new solution hear; The man diffides in his own augury, And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE. n. f. [from diffide.]

Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and could scarce commune or talk one with another but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal To teach diffidence of God, and doubt In feeble hearts, propense enough before To waver. Milton's Sonnets.

Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is the true style, be only on probable proofs, our dissent can reach no higher than an assurance or confidence arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always when you doubt your sense; And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatever attends think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou Diffident not her, when most thou need'st her nigh. Milton.

Phry speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was ready to diffident of it, as to let it be by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as unwillingly to submit to any man's dissent. King Charles.

Diffident makes the humble heart diffident. South.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuso, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuso, Latin.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind.

DIFFLUENCE. n. f. [from diffusus, Latin.]

DIFFLUENCY. n. f. [from diffusus, Latin.] The quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidty of the air, whereby it acquirith no new form, but rather a confidence or determination of its diffuency; and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFLUENT. adj. [from diffusus, Latin.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DIFFFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.]

Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a diffform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refraction of diffform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularity; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or the various position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFFORMITY. n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present diffure of things, they desire to be in a diffure from the primitive; and the idea of diffure is not to avoid all things, but to avoid all things but the good. Locke.

DIFFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [from diffra, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

TO DIFFUSE. v. a. [from diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to descend, long before they could reach the foot of the mountain, they would diffuse themselves every way. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Good out of evil to create; instead Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence to bring His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No God wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Bacon's Henry VII.

A chief renown'd in war, Whose race shall bear aloft the Latin name, And thou his conquer'd world diffuse in fame. Dryden.

DIFFUSE. adj. [from diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFUSED. participial adj. [from diffusus.]

This word seems to have signified, in Shakespeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let us first make a rough sketch of the whole, and then we will diffuse it. South.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffusus.]

Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffusus.]

The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSIVELY. adv. [from diffusus.]

Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffusus.]

The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSIVELY. adv. [from diffusus.]

DIG

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuso.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their nature, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible to the eye, and the species audible of the ear. Bacon's Natural History.

A sheet of very well selected marked paper did not catch diffused light upon the wall, nor throw it out with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, undimmed and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffuso.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, wherever they pass. They make that warmth in others they expect: Their labour works like bodies on a glass, And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts, being in motion, have no cohesion, but glide and fall in any way. Bacon.

No man is so fond of a vessel and diffusive a lust, as to prefer it to an universal world over. South.

The diffusive light of the sun, which is the source of all life, is the source of all life. South.

And when the sun is set, and the moon is up, the diffusive light of the moon is the source of all life. South.

3. Extended.

They are not equal among themselves where the diffusive light is spread; whether in the pope alone, or in the pope alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive light of the pope. South.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffusus.]

Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS. n. f. [from diffusus.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of confidence; large compass of expression.

It is not that I dig with a modern legend, in the diffusive manner of the pope alone, or in the diffusive manner of the pope alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive manner of the pope. South.

riage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as digamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champney very proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied, but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining.

Bishop Freer.
DIGERENT, adj. [from digerens, Latin.] That has the power of digesting, or causing digestion.

DIGEST, n. f. [from digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a poem, and to ble of being digested or concocted.

Those medicines that purge by stool, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.

Barrow's Natural History.

DIGESTION, n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good food is wait on appetite,

And health on both. Shakespeare's Merchant.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because it is all the requisites of such a fermentation,

heat, air, and moisture, and not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater heat than the assistance of the aliment in the stomach; vegetable putrefaction is not the same much animal. Boyle's Works.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any such thing, but is to be ascertained by the signs of health, of age, of health, and the use of the organs of digestion, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find a digest of the present strength or weakness of his system.

Temple.

Every morsel to a fasted hunger, is only a new labour to a tired system. Scott.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymical heat.

We consider, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some matter, will produce gold. Boyle's Nat. Hist.

Digestion is a change the furnaces prepare,

Race of the labour-shufles of the vic,

And by crude vapours in dig flame them. Blount.

On his head his dreadful hat he

Which maketh him invincible to light. Hall.

DIGIT, n. f. [from digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the invited tale of mercy be but two five digits high, or somewhat more, the quail never will not fail, but remain unpierced

there, because it cannot pierce the substance enough with so great a force as does the narrow cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the of the atmosphere. Boyle's Works.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, but several others, have been obtained by math, but all or most of other digits have been originally obtained. Boyle's Works.

DIGITATED, adj. [from digitus, Latin.]

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle

DILEMMA. n. f. [dilemma.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crutch. Bacon's History vii.

Hope, whole weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss; When good or ill does equally confound, And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Cowley

Tully assigns three motives, whereby, without any discommendation, a man may be drawn to become an accuser of others.

DISCOMME'NDER. n. f. [from discommend.] One that discommends; a dispraiser.

To DISCOMME'D. v. a. [dis and commode, Fr.] To put to inconvenience; to molest; to incommode.

DISCOMME'DIOUS. adj. [from discommode.] Inconvenient; troublesome; displeasing.

So many thousand soldiers, without any discommode, or other trade, must either seek service and employment abroad, which may be dangerous; or else employ themselves here at home, which may be discommodeous.

DISCOMME'DITY. n. f. [from discommode.] Inconvenience; disadvantage; hurt; mischief.

We speak now of discommode, how the discommode of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained in it, in the balance of commodities and discommode, the qualities of discommode are to be reconciled.

It is better that a ship should be preserved with some discommode to the sailors, than that, the sailors being in health, the ship should perish.

DIS

To DISCOMPOSE. v. a. [discompose, French.]

1. To disorder; to unsettle.

The debate upon the self-denying ordinance had raised many jealousies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them.

2. To ruffle; to disorder.

Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,

And only flut' to discompose her own.

3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.

No, my dear mother: ill in death it shows,

Your face of mind by rage to discompose.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them.

5. To displace; to discard. Not in use.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a counsellor or near servant.

DISCOMPOSE. n. f. [from discompose.] Disorder; perturbation.

He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with a abundance of tears, and continued in this melancholic discomposure of mind many days.

To DISCOMPERT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by discomper: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFORMITY. n. f. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconsistency.

Lies arise from error and mistake, or matter and figure; they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conception of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things.

DISCONGRUITY. n. f. [dis and congruity.] Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration, from the intrinsic dis- congruity of the one to the other.

DISCONSOLATE. adj. [dis and console.] Void of comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Callus all disconsolate,

With Pindarus his disconsolate, on the hill.

If patiently they bidding they obey,

Disfills them not disconsolate.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh,

Were dropping wet, disconsolate and wan,

And t'rough their thin array receiv'd the rain.

The moon tell us the funerals to us, and so,

by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter nights.

DISCONSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.] In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCONSOLATENESS. n. f. [from disconsolate.] The state of being disconsolate.

DISCONTENT. n. f. [dis and content.] Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brow full of discontent,

Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears.

7

DIS

Woe that their pleasures can't bear discontent, she sigh'd, not that they say'd, but that she went.

DISCONTENT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumpect and slow discontented and discontent; and those the ear singled as fittest for his purpose.

To DISCONTENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman,

Whole humble means match not his haughty spirit.

The discontented now are only they

Whole crimes before did your just cause betray.

DISCONTENTED. participial adj. [from discontent.] Uneasy; cheerless; malevolent.

Let us know

What will the up-you discontented word.

These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world; a diseased body, and a dis- contented mind.

The gods, with a discontented air,

Seems to reject him, tho' he grants his prayer.

DISCONTENTEDNESS. n. f. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A insatiable lust of Alexander the Great calls up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontented looks, in his looks.

DISCONTENTMENT. n. f. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the vices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bottom of that summit church; wherein they live, were more noi-

some than any dungeon.

The politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the potion of discontentment.

DISCONTINUANCE. n. f. [from discontinue.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

Thousands of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small heap,

because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that fix the body most from discontinuation.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider whether our approaches to him

are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy

under any long discontinuation of our conversation with him.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuation of possession, or discontinuation of process.

The effect of discontinuation of possession is,

that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discon- tinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh.

DISCONTINUATION. n. f. [from discontinue.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls.

Newton.

TO DISCONTINUE. v. n. [discontinuer, Fr.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as muscle, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth out, and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Baron.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cause thee to leave thine enemies. Jeremiah.

TO DISCONTINUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lyes I'll tell,
That men shall swear I've discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. Shakespeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, though the voluble motions of the organs from one stopper figure to another, that they mount and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue at. Heller's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Difunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Heat and cold many times out of natural antipathies of nature, but, in these disconveniences of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n sends means to kill your joys with love!

And I, for winking at your discontents,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies,
And that soweth discord among brethren. Psalms.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And mark what discord follows; each thing meets in mere oppugnancy. Shakespeare.

I hold, like that of music's various parts,
That makes the harmony of hearts;
Which, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
And all that order, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and ineffectually affect a man; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords to music; for all sounds whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the task that sings so out of tune, Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Shakespeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords she maketh the sweetest harmony! Purcell.

TO DISCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the other one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCORDANCE. } n. f. [from discord.]

DISCORDANCY. } Disagreement; opposition; inconcistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant motion of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cajor.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither coherence is to be referred; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then it flows the sentence of approbation if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Haller's Organ of Manhood.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two notes that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both, inasmuch, that if they be discordant, tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictory manner.

TO DISCOVER. v. a. [decouvrir, French;] dis and covers.]

1. To show; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

2. To expose to view.

The cover of the coach was made with such joints, that as they might, to avoid the weather, pull it up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open-lighted as on horseback. Steele.

Go draw aside the curtains and discover

The several tokens to this noble prince. Shakespeare.

He discovered deep the seat of darkness, and brought out to light the shadow of death. Psalms.

And now will I discover her lewdness. Shakespeare.

Law can discover sin, but not remove it. Alford.

4. To make known; not to disguise; to reveal.

We will pass over unto those men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Isaiah.

Eye, who unseen

Yet all had heard, with audible lament

Discovered from the place of her retire. Milton.

5. To ken; to spy.

When we had discovered Cyprus, we set sail for the left hand. Shakespeare.

6. To find out; to obtain information.

He shall never, by any alteration in me, discover my knowledge of his mistake. Shakespeare.

7. To detect; to find though concealed.

Up he discovered the serpent. Milton.

Discovered and surpris'd.

Man with strength and force with arm'd
Complete, to have discovered and surpris'd
Whatever wiles of love or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shakespeare.

Another part in squadrons bend their march
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans discovered printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill

Which to his eye discovers unawares

The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis

With glistering spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover lights of woe. Milton.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That may be found out.

That immaterial matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser matter, can never be separated. Newton's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, while connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Beauleg.

DISCOVERER. n. f. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be call'd out. Heller.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Isaac.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubted in those early times, and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Archer.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Adams's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my words, and read discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakespeare.

DISCOVERY. n. f. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who once have us the open sea,
That the red English none more tame have won Beyond the year, and out of heaven's high way,
They made discovery where they see no fun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light

Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obsequ'd. Shakespeare.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discovery of the next. Scott.

DIS

It would be necessary to say something of the due to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible.

TO DISCO'UNSEL. v. a. [dis and counsel.] To dissuade; to give contrary advice. Obsolete.

But him that palmer from that vanity,
With temperate advice discounsell'd. Spenser.

DISCOUNT. n. f. [dis and count.] The sum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood, at a large discount, and sell them as well as he could.

TO DISCO'UNT. v. a. [from the noun.] To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of heaven to charge the bill on me.

The farmers, spitefully combin'd,
Force him to take his tithes a kind;
And discount discounts arrears
By bids for taxes and repairs.

Things we would have them learn, the great and only discouragement is, that they are called to them.

DISCO'URSE. n. f. [discours, French; discursus, Latin.]

1. The act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences.

By reason of that original weakness in the instruments, without which the understanding part is not able in this world by discourse to work, the very conceit of painfulness is a bribe to stay us.

Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unus'd.

The act of the mind which connects propositions, and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it, if we name it reason.

2. Conversation; mutual intercourse of language; talk.

He warrth wiser than himself, more by an hour's discourse than by a day's meditation.

In thy discourse, if thou desire to please,
All such is courteous, useful, new, or witty;
Usefulness comes by labour, wit by ease,
Courtesy grows in court, news in the city.

The vanquish'd party with the victors join'd,
Nor wanted sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind.

3. Effusion of language; speech.

Typical and superficial arguments, of which there is store to be found on both sides, filling the head with variety of thoughts, and the mouth with copious discourse, serve only to amuse the understanding and entertain company.

4. A treatise; a dissertation either written or uttered.

The discourse here is about ideas, which, he says, are truths, and seen in God.

Plutarch, in his discourse upon garrulity, commends the fidelity of the companions of Ulysses.

DISCRETIVE. adj. [discretus, Latin.]

1. [In logic.] Discretive propositions are such wherein various, and seemingly opposite, judgments are made, whose variety or distinction is noted by the particles but, though, yet, &c. as, travellers may change their climate, but not their temper; Job was patient, though his grief was great. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Discretive distinctions are such as imply opposition: as, not a man, but a beast.

DISCRIMINABLE. adj. [from discriminare.] Distinguishable by outward marks or tokens. Did.

TO DISCRIMINATE. v. a. [discrimino, Latin.]

1. To mark with notes of difference; to distinguish by certain tokens from another.

Oysters, and cockles, and muscles, which move not, have no discriminate sex. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

There are three sorts of it, differing in names from each other, and discriminated by the names by three peculiar names. Boyle.

The right hand is discriminated from the left by a natural, necessary, and never to be confounded distinction. Smith.

DIS

Although the features of his countenance be no reason of obedience, yet they may leave to discriminate him from any other person, where she is not to obey. Stillingfleet.

There may be ways of discriminating the voice; as, by acuteness and gravity, the several degrees of rising and falling from one tone or note to another. Holder.

2. To select or separate from others.

You owe little less for what you are not, than for what you are, to that discriminating mercy, to which alone you owe your exemption from miseries. Boyle.

DISCRIMINATENESS. n. f. [from discriminate.] Distinctness; marked difference. Did.

DISCRIMINATION. n. f. [from discriminatio, Latin.]

1. The state of being distinguished from other persons or things.

There is a reverence to be shewed them on the account of their discrimination from other places, and separation for sacred uses. Stillingfleet.

2. The act of distinguishing one from another; distinction; difference put.

A satire should expose nothing but what is corrigible; and make a due discrimination between those that are, and those who are not, the proper objects of it. Addison's Spectator.

By that prudent discrimination made between the offenders of different degrees, he obliges those whom he has distinguished as objects of mercy. Addison's Spectator.

3. The marks of distinction.

Take heed of abetting any factious, or applying any public discrimination in matters of religion. King Charles.

Letters are from the first original discriminations of voice, by way of articulation, whereby the ear is able to judge and observe the differences of vocal sounds. Holder.

DISCRIMINATIVE. adj. [from discriminate.]

1. That makes the mark of distinction; characteristic.

The only standing test, and discriminative characteristic, of any metal or mineral, must be sought for in the constituent matter of it. Woodward.

I will, if please you to discurse, after
To give you of that ill. Fanny Queen.
DISCURSIVE. adj. [discurff, Fr. from discurro, Latin.]

1. Moving here and there; roving; desultory.

Some noises help sleep; as the blowing of the wind, and the trickling of water: they move a gentle attention and whatsoever moveth attention, without too much labour, stillet the natural and discurfue motion of the spirits. Raver.

2. Proceeding by regular gradation from premises to consequences; argumentative. This is sometimes, perhaps not improperly, written discurfue.

There is a tenacity of soul and body, of more efficacy for the receiving of divine truths, than the greatest pretences to a discurfue demonstration.

There hath been much dispute touching the knowledge of brutes, whether they have a kind of discurfue faculty, whic some call reason.

DISCURSIVELY. adv. [from discurfue.]
By due gradation of argument.

We have a principle within, whereby we think,
and we know we think; whereby we do discurfue, and by way of ratiocination, deduce one thing from another. H. H.

DISCURSORY. adj. [discurfor, Lat.] Argumental; rational.

DISCUS. n. f. [Latin.] A quoit; a heavy piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports.

From Elatreus' strong arm the discus flies,
And sings with unmatch'd force along the skies.

Pope.

TO DISCUSS. v. a. [discutio, diffusum,
Latin.]

1. To examine; to ventilate; to clear by disquisition.

We are to discuss only those general exceptions which have been taken. Hooker.

DISCUSSION. n. f. [from discuss.]

1. Disquisition; examination; ventilation of a question.

Truth cannot be found without some labour and intention of the mind, and the thoughts dwelling a considerable time upon the survey and discuss of each particular. South.

Various discussions test our heated brain;
Opinions often turn, still doubts remain;
And who indulges thought, increases pain.

Prive.

2. [In surgery.] Discussio or resolution is nothing else but breathing out the humours by insensible transpiration.

Wifeman.

DISCUSSIVE. adj. [from discuss.] Having the power to discuss or disperse any noxious matter.

DISCUTIENS. n. f. [discutiens, Latin.]
A medicine that has power to repel or drive back the matter of tumours in the blood. It sometimes means the same as carminative.

The swellings arising from these require to be treated, in their beginning, with moderate re-pellents and discutiens. Wifeman.

TO DISDAIN. v. a. [desdigner, Fr.]
To scorn; to consider as unworthy of one's character.

There is nothing so great, which I will fear to do for you; nor nothing so small, which I will disdain to do for you. Sidney.

They do disdain as much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath. Shakespeare.

What fate and nice y I might well delay
By tale of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shakespeare.

Tell him, Cato

Disdains a life which he has power to offer.

Addison.

DISDAIN. n. f. [disdigne, Ital.] Contempt; scorn; contemptuous anger; indignation.

Children being haughty, through disdain and want of nurture, do stain the nobility of their kindred. Fidus.

But against you, ye Greeks, ye coward train,
Gods! how my soul is mov'd with just disdain!

Pope's Odyss.

DISDAINFUL. adj. [disdigne and full.]
Contemptuous; haughtily scornful;
indignant.

There will come a time when three words, uttered with charity and meekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward, than three thousand volumes, written with disdainful sharpness of wit. Hooker.

The queen is ultimate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it;
Disdainful to be tried by it. Shakespeare.

Seek through this grove:
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it when the next thing he espies
Shall be the lady. Shakespeare.

But those I can accuse, I can forgive:
By my disdainful tongue let them live. Dryden.

The disdainful full came rushing through the wound. Dryden.

DISDAINFULLY. adv. [from disdainful.]
Contemptuously; with haughty scorn;
with indignation.

Little greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more.

Shakespeare.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures effern from any one. South.

DISDAINFULNESS. n. f. [from disdainful.]
Contempt; contemptuousness;
haughty scorn.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her.

Sidney.

A proud disdainfulness of other men. Alchem.

DISEASE. n. f. [dis and ease.] Distemper; malady; sickness; morbid
state.

What's the disease he means?
—'Tis call'd the evil. Shakespeare.

And Aia, in the thirty and ninth year of his reign, was diseased in his feet, and his disease was exceeding great; and in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. Chron.

It is idle to propose remedies before we are assured of the disease, or to be in pain till we are convinced of the danger. Swift.

Intemperance

Is meats and drinks, which in the earth shall bring Diseases disc. Milton.

Then wretched North
Walks the dire pow'r of pestilential disease.
Thamson's Summer.

TO DISEASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To afflict with disease; to torment with pain or sickness; to make morbid;
to infect.

We are all diseased.

And with age surfeiting and wanton hours
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever.

Flatt'ers yet wear silk, drink wine, he saith, Hug their diseased perfumes, and have for of the ever Timon was. Shakespeare.

Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth. Shakespeare.

He was diseased in his feet.

A leaz-house it seem'd, wherein were Numbers of all diseased, all maladies
Of gladly spasm, or racking torture. Milton.

2. To put to pain; to pain; to make uneasy.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not all disease them. Locke.

DISEASEDNESS. n. f. [from diseased.] Sickness; morbidness; the state of being diseased.

This is a restoration to some former state, not that state of indigency and diseasedness. Locke.

DISEMBOD. adj. [dis and embod.] Blunted;
obtunded; dulled.

I give myself

To think, when thou shalt be diseased by her Whom now thou thin'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Shakespeare.

TO DISEMBARK. v. a. [dis and embark.]
To carry to land.

I must unto the land, to disembark
Some necessities. Shakespeare.

TO DISEMBARK. v. s. To land; to go on land.

There disembarking on the green sea-side,
We land our cattle, and the spoil divide. Pope.

TO DISEMBITTER. v. a. [dis and embitter.] To sweeten; to free from bitterness; to clear from acrimony; an unusual word.

Encourage such innocent amusements as may the mouth of a river; to vent.

Rivers

In ample oceans disembogu'd, or lost. Dryden.
Rolling down, the steep Timavus raves,
And through nine channels disembogues his waves.

Addison.

TO DISEMBO'GUS. v. s. To gain a vent;
to flow.

By eminences placed up and down the ghile,
the rivers made innumerable turnings and windings, and at last disembogues in several mouths into the sea. Christ.

DISEMBO'WELLED. participial adj. [dis and embowel.] Taken from out the bowels.

So her disembowell'd web
As a bone in a hall or kitchen spreads, Obvious to vulgar flies. Philips.

TO DISEMBO'IL. v. a. [deseuiller, Fr.]
To disentangle; to free from perplexity;
to reduce from confusion.

Then earth from air, and seas from earth were driv'n,
And grosser air sunk from ethereal heav'n;
But disengag'd, they take their proper place.
Dryden.

The system of his politics is disengag'd, and leaved of all those incoherences and independent matters that are woven into this motley ice.
Addison.

DISENAG'SLE. v. a. [dis and enable.]
To deprive of power; to disable; to sink into weakness; to weaken.

Now age has overtaken me; and what, a more insufferable evil, through the change of the met, has wholly disabled me.
Dryden.

DISENCHANT. v. a. [dis and enchant.]
To free from the force of an enchantment; to deliver from the power of charms or spells.

Alas! let your own brain disenchant you.
Sidney.

Mute, sweep thy disenchant wing to truth,
Denham.

Haste to thy work; a noble stroke or two Ends all the charms, and disenchant the grove.
Dryden.

DISCUMBER. v. a. [dis and en- cumber.]
To discharge from encumbrances; to free from clogs and impediments; to disburden; to exonerate.

It will need the actual intention, the particular stress and application of the whole soul, to dis-cumber and let it free, to tear off its rust, and remove those hindrances which would otherwise clog and check the freedom of its operations.
Spratt.

The dis-cumber'd soul
Flew off, and left behind the clouds and starry pole.
Dryden.

Dreams look like the amusements of the soul,
when she is dis-cumber'd of her machine; her sports and recreations, when she has laid her charge asleep.
Spectator.

To free from obstruction of any kind.

Dim night had dis-cumber'd heav'n.
Milton.
The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, dis-cumber'd building in the island that I have ever seen.
Addison on Italy.

DISCUMBERANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Freedom from encumbrance and obstruction.

There are many who make a figure below what their fortune or merit entitles them to, out of mere chance, and an elegant desire of ease and dis-cumberance.
Spectator.

DISENGA'GE. v. a. [dis and engage.]
To separate from any thing with which it is in union.

Some others, being very light, would float up and down a good while before they could at last dis-engage themselves and de-cide.
Bacon's Theory.

To disentangle; to clear from impediments or difficulties.

From civil troubles he did us dis-engage;
And nobler objects for our martial rage.
Waller.

In the next paragraph, I found my author very well dis-engage'd from quotations.
Atterbury.

To withdraw, applied to the affection;
to wean; to abstract the mind.

It is requisite that we should acquaint ourselves with God, that we should frequently dis-engage our hearts from earthly pursuits.
Atterbury.

The consideration that should dis-engage our fondness from worldly things, is, that they are uncertain in their foundation; fading, transient, and corruptible in their nature.
Report.

To free from any powerful detention.

When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They cleave, further, and distinctly see.
Denham.

5. To release from an obligation.

DISENGA'GE. v. a. To let one's self free from; to withdraw one's affections from.

TO DISENTA'NGLE. v. a. [dis and en- tangle.]

1. To unfold or loose the parts of any thing interwoven with one another.

Enough in conversation particles to entangle one another, that they cannot in a short time clear themselves, yet they do incessantly strive to dis-entangle themselves, and get away.
Boyle.

2. To set free from impediments; to disembroid; to clear from perplexity or difficulty.

Till now could find some expedient to expli-cate and dis-entangle themselves out of this labyrinth, they made no advance towards supplying their armies.
Clarendon.

The welfare of their souls requires a better judgment than their own, either to guide them in their duty, or to dis-entangle them from a temptation.
Smith.

3. To disengage; to separate.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood by us than as a mind free and dis-entangled from all corporeal mixtures.
Strongheart.

TO DISENTA'RR. v. a. [dis and enterrer, French.] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

Though the blindness of some fanatics have savage on the bodies of the dead, and have been so injurious unto worms as to dis-enterr the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul.
Brown.

TO DISENTHRA'L. v. a. [dis and enthrall.]

To set free; to restore to liberty; to rescue from slavery.

But God my soul shall dis-enthrall;
For I upon his name will call.
Samuel.

If religion were false, bad men would let the utmost force of their reason work to discover that fallacy, and thereby dis-enthrall themselves.
Smith.

TO DISENTHRO'NE. v. a. [dis and en- thron.] To depose from sovereignty;
to dethrone.

Either to dis-enthron the king of heav'n
We war, if we be best; or to regain
Our own right lost.
Milton.

You are but as a form in wax
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or dis-figure it.
Shakespeare.

In this antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much dis-figure'd.
Shaks.

Abuse is their punishment,
Dis-figure not God's work, but their own.
Or, if his work, by their selves de-laid.
Milton.

Utiel, on the Aethiopian mount,
Saw him dis-figure'd more than could befall Spirit of happy sort.
Milton.

A nose flatter, or a mouth wider, could have confided, as well as the rest of his figure, with such a soul and such parts made him, dis-figure'd as he was, capable to be a signatory in the church.
Locke.

Not would his slaughter'd army now have been
On Atreus's lands, dis-figure'd with their wounds,
To gaze the wolves and vultures of Numidia.
Addison's Cato.

Having absence, and travels which had disfigure him, made him altogether unknown.
Poem on Fanny Parry.

DISFIGUREMENT. n. f. [from disfigure.] Defacement of beauty; change of a better form to a worse.

The dis-figurement that travel or sickness has bestowed upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the ill.
Smith.

And they, so perfect in their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement.
Milton.

Besides whom is no god, compar'd with idols,
Disgrace his face, blasphemy, and had in scorn.
Milton.

To DISGORGE. v. a. [degorger, Fr. from gorge, the throat.]

1. To discharge by the mouth; to spew out; to vomit.

So, for this common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy gluttony before of the royal Richard?
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up.

From the distant shore they loudly laugh,
To see his heaving breast disgorge the briny draught.
Dryden.

2. To pour out with violence.

All th' en-bosom'd furies and head'd evils,
That thou with licence of free soul hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world?

The deep-drawing harks do there disgorge
Their warlike laughter.
Shakespeare.

They move along the banks
Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
Into the burning lake their baleful streams.
Milton.

Countries much annoyed with earthquakes have volcanoes; and these are constantly all in flames, whenever any earthquake happens; they disgorge that fire which was the cause of the disaster.
Derham.

DISGRACE. n. s. [disgrace, Fr.]

1. State of being out of favour.

2. State of ignominy; dishonour; state of shame.

To such bondage he was for so many courses led by her, whose disgraces to him were grac'd by her excellence.
Sidney.

4. Cause of shame.

And is it not a foul disgrace,
To lose the brightness of my face?
And be whole audience disdain'd a place,
Brib'd by a title, makes it a disgrace.
Brown.

To DISGRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring a reproach upon; to dishonour, as an agent.

We may not so in any one special kind disgrace her, that we disgrace her in any other; but let all her ways be according unto their place and degree adored.
Hesker.

Men's passions disgrace them far in misrepresenting an opinion which they have a mind to disgrace.
Hymet.

with this particularity in it, that it is not square like a dish at one end; but it was not this end at which the sacrifice was laid.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish,
Or do his grey hairs any violence?
Milton.

A dish for our silver dish,
Is what I want, is what I wish.
Pope.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship.
Shakespeare.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods;
Not hew him as a carcase fit for hounds.
Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The contract your persons with this kind of fetch,
One herd of aims and fancies with cold dis;
With scraps o' th' count; it is no contract, none.
Shakespeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dis
More than another, that a pheasant is. Suckling.
The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious *dis*es that we have the use and benefit of. Woodward.

salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not to confound with christian charity. Hobbes.

Be not disharmen then, nor cloud those books
That wait to be more cheerful and serene. Milton.

Yet neither thus disharmen'd nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd, I wait. Milton.

It is a consideration that might disharmen those who are engaged against the common advances, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends. Stillingfleet.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought to reason to disharmen men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the solicitudes of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disharmen enemies. Atterbury.

*Dis*erted, ran howling o'er the plain. Dryden.

To DISH'ER. v. a. [dechouler, French.]

To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent, and hair *dis*hevelled,
Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan. Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with *dis*hevelled hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves after the manner of the country. Kneller.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning mat'ons with *dis*hevel'd hair. Dryden's Aeneid.

DISHING. adj. [from dis.] Concave;
a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheel, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by letting off the spokes, and fixing more outward. Mary.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was never bid to *dis*cern, nor time to execute. It was not just to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be blinded by a glowing appetite, for an unconscionable turn the balance to a false *dis*cern-ment. South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right or wrong, honest and *dis*honest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature. Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

*dis*honour of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend. Boyle's Seraphick Lover.

Take him for your husband and your lord;
'Tis no *dis*honour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryden.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce *dis*honour of her by my life.
She never knew harm doing. Shakespeare.

To DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To *dis*grace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious fact, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or *dis*honour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakespeare.

This no more *dis*honours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your torture. Shakespeare.

A woman that dishonour'd her husband, shall be judg'd wife of all; but she that dishonour'd him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.
Ecclesiasticus.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make themselves appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my ill give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live;
*Dis*honour'd by the king of men he stands;

provement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to im- provement; the contrary to improve- ment.

The *dis*advantage of the matter would be, an utter neglect and *dis*provement of the cause. Motley.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real *dis*improvements. Scott.

To DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. f. [from disjunctus, Latin.] Disunion; separation; putting.

You may find your disjunction now, from whom you are. Macaulay.

There is a great analogy between the natural and disjunction, in which the disjunction part justly supplies the disjunction and the disjunction of this from the disjunction of the disjunction of the body and the disjunction of the body. Macaulay.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.] 1. Incapable of union.

Sex principles, whole atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a disjunctive manner to make a visible mass. Macaulay.

2. That marks separation or opposition; as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive in disjunctive. Macaulay.

3. In logic.

A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are applied to one another by disjunctive particles, as, It is either day or night. The disjunctive is either disjunctive or disjunctive. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true, but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between disjunctive and raining.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major pro-

DIV

DIVERGENT. adj. [from divergens, Lat.] Tending to various parts from one point.

DIVERS. adj. [diversus, Lat.] Several; sundry; more than one. Out of use.

We have divers examples in the church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, repented, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel.

The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old; then they cut them, and new ones come about seven years; but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty.

Divert letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solyman's counsels were revealed.

Divert friends thought it strange, that a whole day they should acquire a new colour upon the addition of spring-water.

DIVERSE. adj. [diversus, Latin.]

1. Different from another.

Five great beasts came up from the sea, descending to our vessels.

2. Different from itself; various; multifarious; diffused.

Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever say any man so much as to be wholly his.

3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.

The guard And thirty cucumber, when they perceive The approaching olive, with reluctance By Her lady fibres, and with tender's creep Down, detaching contact.

To leave his paper, Carl, was next his care; His paper's light by diversity in air.

DIVERSIFICATION. n. f. [from diversify, Fr.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.

If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles, or minerals of diversification, should give rise to so many colours.

2. Variation; variation.

3. Variety of forms; multifariousness.

4. Change; alteration.

Thus, which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.

TO DIVERSIFY. v. a. [diversify, Fr.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish; to discriminate.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another, as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods and prairie, we perceive more clear, another more darkness, it is a pleasant picture.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter, which may be much diversified.

DIVERSION. n. f. [from divert, Fr.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Cutting off the tops, and pulling off the buds, much diversion of the sap for a time, and diverting it to the sprouts that were not forward.

Reason the card, but passion is the gate.

DIV

I have ranked this diversion of Christian practice among the effects of our contentions.

1. The cause by which any thing is turned from its proper course or tendency.

Fortunes, honours, friends, Are mere diversions from love's proper object, Which only is itself.

2. Sport; something that unbends the mind by turning it off from care.

Diversion seems to be something lighter than amusement, and less forcible than pleasure.

You for those ends whole days in council sit, And the diversion of your youth forget.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions to readers.

3. [In war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design, by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVERSITY. n. f. [diversitas, Fr. from diversitas, Latin.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and not resting in a bare diversity, rise into a contrary.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension.

2. Variety.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of fictions, and if God should grant every one a middle Reason, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed to it.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Considering any thing as existing at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thence form the ideas of identity and diversity.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow has been my bed display, Bright in bright display of day.

DIVERSLY. adj. [from divers, Fr.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

The lack we all have, as well of grout as of earthly favours, is to each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are to diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive; what all stand in need of seldom hath bid.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted.

Leicester betrayed a desire to print him in the queen's favour, which was diversly interpreted by such as thought that great artisan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection.

The universal matter, which Muses comprehend under the names of heaven and earth, is by diversly understood.

Could nought avail, however fam'd in war; Nor arms leagu'd, that diversly ally'd To curb his power.

2. In different directions; to different points.

On life's vast ocean diversly we sail; Reason the card, but passion is the gale.

DIV

TO DIVERT. v. a. [divertis, Lat.]

1. To turn off from any direction or course.

I rather will subject me to the malice Of a diverted blood and bloody brother. Knots, by the confus of the meeting sap, Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain, Tortive and errant, from his course of growth.

He finds no reason to have his rent abated, because a greater part of it is diverted from his land.

Nothing more is requisite for producing all the variety of colours, and degrees of relativity, than that the rays of light be bodies of different sizes; the least of which may make violet, the weakest and darkest of the colours, and be more easily diverted by refracting surfaces from the right course; and the rest, as they are bigger and bigger, make the stronger and more lucid colours, blue, green, yellow, and red, and be more and more difficultly diverted.

2. To draw forces to a different part.

The kings of England would have had an absolute conquest of Ireland, if their whole power had been employed; but still there arose many occasions, which divided and diverted their power some other way.

3. To withdraw the mind.

Alas, how simple, to these cases compar'd, Was that crude apple that diverted Eve. They avoid pleasure, lest they should have their affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort.

4. To please; to exhilarate. See DIVERSION.

An ingenious gentleman did divert or divert the kingdom by his papers.

5. To subvert; to destroy; in Shakespeare, unless it belong to the first sense.

Frights, changes, horrors, Divert and crack, rend and deracinate The unity and married calm of states.

DIVERTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Any thing that diverts or alleviates.

Anging was, after tedious study, a gift to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, and a divert of sadness.

TO DIVERTISE. v. a. [divertis, Fr. from divertis, Latin.] To please; to exhilarate; to divert. Little used.

Let us now instruct, let them divertise, and let them move us; this is what is properly meant by the word divertise.

DIVERTISEMENT. n. f. [divertissement, Fr.] Diversion; delight; pleasure.

How long forever men are of bad divertisement, it will prove which ends in heaviness.

DIVERTIVE. adj. [from divertis, Fr.] Recreative; amusive; exhilarating. A word not fully authorized.

I would not exclude the common accidents of life, nor even things of a pleasant and divertive nature, so they are innocent, from conversation.

TO DIVERSE. v. a. [diversis, French.] The English word is therefore more properly written divers. See DAVEST.

To strip; to make naked; to denude. Then of his arms Androgus he divers; His sword, his shield, he takes, and plumed crests.

DIV

Let us divest the gay phantoms of temporal happiness of all that false lustre and ornament in which the pride, the passions, and the folly of men have dressed it up.

DIVESTURE. n. f. [from divest.] The act of putting off.

The divestiture of mortality dispenses them from those laborious and avocating duties which are here requisite to be performed.

DIVISIBLE. adj. [from divide.] Separate; different; parted. Not used.

How could communities maintain peaceful commerce from divisible shores?

DIVIDANT. adj. [from divide.] Different; separate. Not in use.

Twin'd brothers of one womb,
Whole procreation, residence, and birth
Scarce is divident, touch with several fortunes.

TO DIVIDE. v. a. [divido, Latin.]

1. To part one whole into different pieces.
Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown;
Heav'n'd a mortal to the skies,
She drew an angel down.

They were divided into little independent societies, speaking different languages.

2. To separate; to keep apart, by standing as a partition between.

Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.

You must go
Where seas, and winds, and deserts will divide you.

3. To disunite by discord.
There shall five in one house be divided.

4. To deal out; to give in shares.
Then in the midst a tearing pison did break
The name of Antony: it was divided Between her heart and lips.

Divide the prey into two parts; between them thou took'st the war upon them, who went out to fight and between all the congregation.

Cain and Japhet were heads and princes over their families, and had a right to divide the earth by families.

DIVIDE. v. n.

1. To part; to sunder.

2. To break friendship.
Love cools, friendship falls off,
Brothers divide.

DIVIDED. n. f. [from divide.]

1. A share; the part allotted in division.
Each person shall adapt to himself his peculiar share, like other dividends.

It on such petty merits you confer
So vast a prize, let each his portion share;
Make a just dividend; and, if not all,
The greater part to Diomedes will fall.

2. [In arithmetic.] The number given to be parted or divided.

DIVIDER. n. f. [from divide.]

1. That which parts any thing into pieces.
According as the body moved, the dividers did move and more enter into the divided body; so it joined itself to some new parts of the medium or divided body, and did in like manner forsake others.

2. A distributor; he who deals out to each his share.
Who made me a judge or divider over you.

3. A disuniter; she person or cause that breaks concord.
Money, the great divider of the world, hath,

DIV

by a strange revolution, been the great uniter of a divided people.

4. A particular kind of compasses.

DIVIDUAL. adj. [dividuum, Latin.] Divided; shared or participated in common with others.

She shines,
Revolv'd on heav'n's great axle, and her reign
With thousand lesser lights dividual holds,
With thousand thousand stars!

DIVINATION. n. f. [divinatio, Lat.]

1. Divination is a prediction or foretelling of future things, which are of a secret and hidden nature, and cannot be known by any human means.

Certain tokens they noted in birds, or in the entrails of beasts, or by other the like frivolous divinations.

Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel.

His countenance did imprint an awe,
And naturally all souls to his did bow;
As wands of divination downward draw,
And point to beds where sovereign good doth grow.

The excellency of the soul is soon by its power of divining in dreams: that several such divinations have been made, none can question who believe the holy writings.

2. Conjectural preface or prediction.
Tell thou thy earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace.

DIVINE. adj. [divinus, Latin.]

1. Partaking of the nature of God.
Her line
Was hero-make, half human, half divine.

2. Proceeding from God; not natural; not human.

The benefit of nature's light is not thought excluded as unnecessary, because the necessity of a divine light is magnified.

3. Excellent in a supreme degree. In this sense it may admit of comparison.

The divine and the richest mind,
Both by art's purchase and by nature's dower,
That ever was from heav'n to earth combin'd.

4. Prefageful; divining; prescient.
Yet do his heart, divine or something ill,
Might give him; he the fathom's measure felt.

DIVINE. n. f.

1. A minister of the gospel; a priest; a clergyman.
Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation.

Give Mutius leave to proceed in the discourse; for he spoke like a divine in armour.

A divine has nothing to say to the wisest congregation, which he may not express in a manner to be understood by the meanest among them.

2. A man skilled in divinity; a theologian.
Th' eternal cause in their immortal lines
Was taught, and poets were the first divines.

TO DIVINE. v. a. [divino, Latin.] To foretell; to foreknow; to preface.

Why dost thou say King Richard is depos'd?
Darest thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall?

TO DIVINE. v. n.

1. To utter prognostication.

DIV

Then is Calder and he keeps together.—If I were to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

The prophets thereof divine for money. Isaiah.

2. To feel presages.
If secret powers
Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.

3. To conjecture; to guess.
The best of commentators can but guess at his meaning; none can be certain he has divined rightly.

He took it with a bow, and loch divin'd
The seeming toy was not for nought design'd.

In change of torment would be ease;
Could you divine what lovers bear,
Even you, Prometheus, would confess
There is no torture like despair.

DIVINELY. adv. [from divine.]

1. By the agency or influence of God.
Faith, as we use the word, called commonly divine faith, has to do with no propositions but those which are supposed to be divinely inspired.

This topic was very divinely made use of by our apostle, in his conference with philosophers, and the inquisitive people of Athens.

2. Excellently; in the supreme degree.
The Grecians most divinely have given to the active perfection of men, a name expressing both beauty and goodness.

She fair, divinely fair! fit love for gods.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge.

3. In a manner noting a deity.
His golden horns appear'd,
That on the forehead shone divinely bright,
And o'er the banks diffus'd a yellow light.

DIVINENESS. n. f. [from divine.]

1. Divinity; participation of the divine nature.
Is it then impossible to distinguish the divineness of this book from that which is humane?

2. Excellence in the supreme degree.
By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon: behold divineness
No elder than a boy.

DIVINER. n. f. [from divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.
This dudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Diomedes, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exciting meaner trumplings, and acting his deceptions in witches, magicians, and such inferior seducers.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.
If he limited be so to out of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts, that can assure him that he was thinking.

DIVINERESS. n. f. [from diviner.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.
The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which brother or sister should reign
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train.

DIVINITY. n. f. [divinité, Fr. divinitas, Lat.]

DOC

expletively: as, I do love, or I love; I did love, or I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the Father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first Person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest.

Bacon's Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does exact.

Dryden.

Expletives their feeble aid do join.

Pope.

10. Sometimes emphatically: as, I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul

But I do love thee; and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Shakespeare.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition: as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

To DOAT. v. n. See To DOZE.

DOCIBLE. adj. [docilis, Lat.] Tractable; docile; easy to be taught.

The shining feat of low-truffles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most foolish age.

Milton.

DOCILENESS. n. f. [from docile.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble bound, as also of the docility of dogs in general.

Watson's Register.

DOCILE. adj. [docilis, Latin.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful.

Ellis's Fugate.

2. With as before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,

With smiles I could betray, with temper kill

Pope.

DOCILITY. n. f. [docilitas, Fr. from docilis, Latin.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed our understanding was aptness to study, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous.

Locke.

What is more admirable than the frugality of every creature for use? the docility of an elephant, and the industry of a camel for travelling in deserts.

Grew.

DOCK. n. f. [docca, Saxon.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine, and the sort called the oriental bardock, is said to be the true rhubarb.

Milner.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough nettles, kecklies, burrs,
Lacking burn beauty and utility.

Shakespeare.

My love for gentle Darnley's there grows

Than you tall once that rises to my note:

Cut down the dock, "twill sprout again; but know,

Love rooted out, again will never grow.

Swijt.

DOCK. n. f.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Buntus. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula.

Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. f. [as some imagine, of doxus.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatwain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please.

Howell.

There are docks for their gallees and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations.

Addison.

DOC

To DOCK; v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

One or two stout constant centry, who started all favours handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass.

Swift.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DOCKET. n. f. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing.

Ditt.

DOCTOR. n. f. [doctor, Lat.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import, it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman did it, but a civil doctor,
Who did relate three thousand ducats of me,
And begged the ring.

Shakespeare.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors tormented their pride,
Calumniators, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes

Dentham.

Each profelyte would vote his doctor best,

With absolute exclusion to the rest.

Dentham.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By medicine life may be prolonged, yet death
Will leave the doctor too.

Shakespeare.

How does your patient, doctor?

—Not to sick, my lord,

As she is troubled with thick coming fancies.

Shakespeare.

Children will not take these medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother.

Get of Tongue.

To physicians let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a doctor's cure;
Let them, but under their superstitious hills,
When doctors find have sign'd the bloody bill.

Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at his great earnest.

Gay.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be a doctor.

Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest scholar in the school.

Diph. in Baker.

To DOCTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

DOCTORAL. adj. [doctoralis, Lat.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

South.

2. Precept, in an ill sense; a precept violently authoritative, magnanimously dogmatical, solemnly trudging.

Genie incantations, precepts, and the most penetrating of all inquiries, but in the end, common men think them less striking, and depend upon their guard.

It is not unnecessary, digest the common cracking notions into formal laws.

DODDER. n. f. [dodder, to shoot up. Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant; when it first rises from the seed it has but a root, which pierces the earth near the roots of other plants; but the filaments of which it is formed soon after rising about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the sides of the plants, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments of dark brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which at length fall down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment.

DODDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererect plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew.

Dodder'd with age, whole boughs encompass'd round

The household gods, and shade the holy ground.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Johnson.
Leave, leave, fair bride! your tumbler bed,
No more shall you return to it alone,
If purish sadness, and your body's purp,
Like to a grave, the yielding d we duth dirt.
Down.

We tumble on our down, and count the blasphemy
Of a short minute's slumber. Devere.

A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes, or mollifies.
Thou hast my finest down of all my cares!
I could rest on my thoughts upon this breast
To a softness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southey.

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.
I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down began to shade his face.
Dryden.

On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man.
Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seed.

- To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot. He has drawn a blank, and smiles. Dryden.
- To make a fore-run by attraction. To draw off. To retire; to retreat. When the engagement proves defective, the way to draw off by degrees, and not to come to an open rupture. Clarendon.
1. To draw on. To advance; to approach. The first day drawn on, when I was left.
- To draw up. To form troops into regular order.

- The lord Rempard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no room left on that side, drew up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.
19. To DRAW retains, through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull. It expresses an action gradual or continuous, and leisurely. Thus we forge a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream. We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We write a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupulosity.
- DRAW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of drawing.
 2. The lot or chance drawn.
- DRAWBACK. n. f. [draw and back.] Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason. In pawning and drawbacks I lose half my rent; Whatever they give me, I must be content. Swift.
- DRAWBRIDGE. n. f. [draw and bridge.] A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure. Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, connected together by a drawbridge. Curwen.
- DRAWER. n. f. [from draw.]
1. One employed in procuring water from the well. From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water. Dryden's Essay.
 2. One whose business is to draw liquors from the cask. Stand in some bye room, while I question my pious drawer to what end he gave me the sugar. Shakspeare's Henry IV. Let the drawers be ready with wine and flesh glasses; Let the waiters have eyes, though their tongues must be tied. Ben Jonson. A man of fire is a general enemy to all waiters, and makes the drawers afraid, and his footmen at home know he is not to be provoked. Tattle.
3. That which has the power of attraction. Love is a flame, and therefore we say beauty is attractive, because physicians observe that fire is a greater drawer. Swift.
4. A box in a safe, out of which it is drawn at pleasure. There may be other and different intelligent beings, of whose faculties he has as little knowledge, or apprehension, as a woman, that up in one drawer of a cabinet, hath of the tentacles or bodiness of a man. Locke. We will suppose the China dishes taken off, and a drawer of medals, supplying their room. Addison's Miscellany.
5. [In the plural.] The lower part of a man's dress. The Mahometan harden the bodies of their children, by making them go stark naked, without shirt or drawers, till they are ten years old. Locke.
- DRAWING. n. f. [from draw.] Delineation; representation. They random drawings from your sheets shall take. And of one beauty many blunders make. Pope.
- DRAWINGROOM. n. f. [from draw and room.] The room in which company assembles at court.

- What you heard of the worthy speaking of you in the drawingroom was not true: The friends of princes are generally as ill raised as the friends of wits.
2. The company assembled there. DRAWN. part. [from draw.] An army was drawn together of near six thousand horse. Clarendon. So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow With vigour drawn, must put the shaft below. Dryden's Fables.
1. Equal; where each party takes his own stake. If we make a drawn game of it, or proceed but moderate advantages, every British heart must tremble. Addison.
 2. With a sword drawn. What, art thou drawn among those heartless hinds? Shakspeare.
 3. Open; put aside, or unclosed. A curtain drawn pelted to our view A town belieg'd. Dryden's Tyrannic Love.
 4. Eviscerated. There is no more flesh in thee than in a stoned prune: no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakspeare.
 5. Induced as from some motive. The truth will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Swift's on Ireland. As this friendship was drawn together by love on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Heyward.
- DRAWWELL. n. f. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord. The first concert, tending to a watch, was a drawwell: the people of old were wont only to let down a picher with a handcord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Gressy.
- To DRAWL. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow, driving way. Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone Through the long heavy page draw on. Pope.
- DRAY. n. f. [dray, Saxon.] DRAYCART. n. f. The car on which beer is carried. Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison. When drays bound high, then never cross the hand, Where bubbling yeast is blown by gulls of wind. Gay.
- DRAYHORSE. n. f. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray. This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tattle.
- DRAYMAN. n. f. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart. A race of draymen bid God speed him well, And bid the tribute of his supple knee. Shakspeare. Have not colliers, draymen, and mechanicks givined as well as preachers? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern. Swift.
- DRAYPLOUGH. n. f. [dray and plough.] A plough of a particular kind. The drayplough is the best plough in winter for heavy clay. Most men's Husbandry.
- DRAZZLE. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from drizzle, the scum or drofs of human nature; or from drizzle, French, a whore.] A low, mean, worthless wretch. At the devil sits witches, To be their gully for a space, That, when the time's expired, the drizzle For ever may become his spouse. Shakspeare.
- DREAD. n. f. [dread, Saxon.]
1. Fear; terror; fright; horror either felt or impressed.

DREDGE. n. f. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

Foroysters they have a peculiar dredge, a thick, strong net, fastened to three spalls of iron, and drawn at the boats stern, gathering whatsoever it meets lying in the bottom.

DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne find a welcome to the net.

DREDGER. n. f. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.

DREGGINESS. n. f. [from dreggy.] Ful-ness of dregs or lees; foulness; mud-diness; feculence.

DREGGISH. adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggy liquor,
they sing in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong.

DREGGY. adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood or feed the limbs unfit.

Ripe grapes being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out.

DREGS. n. f. [bregten, Saxon; dreggan, Islandick.]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees;
the grounds; the feculence.

Fam would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame. Dryden.
They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.

We from the dregs of life think to receive
What the full spightly running could not give.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Lick to the dregs and squabbings of the brain.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him.

3. Dregs; sweepings; refuse.

Heaven's favourite thou, for better fate design'd
Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind. Dryden.
What disfigurement we must be under whether God will regard our feculence, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the dregs of nothing and finity, and the years in which we have no pleasure.

TO DRAIN. v. a. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: speak differently perhaps by chance.

She is the nurse of her lady's secrets; tis but letting her mill a-going, and I can draw her of them all.

Tis drain'd and emptied of its poison now;
A cordial draught.

DRENCH. v. a. [brenkan, Saxon.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were, drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture:
in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep
Their drench'd natures lie, as in a death. Shaksp.
Too off, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd
Our veins in native blood.

3. To physick by violence.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well bleed, and drench them.

DRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such belook them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake becometh not dull,
That in our proper motion we ascend.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Then counsels are more like a drench that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank or licked off.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. f. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or soaks any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see
In danger rather to be drent than brent?

TO DRESS. v. a. [dresser, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request
He made was, like his brothers to be dressed;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly: It is used with up and cut to enforce it.

Look upon pictures set upon that idle that is in at the fan, or where they look leisurely to see, as they come to care you to be so, you for on their paint and dross, and all the rest tricks up and cut, and glaze, and all the rest of the art.

3. To adorn; to deck; to embellish; to furnish.

What was a fine room in the middle of the house, and which was a great deal for the extraneous to him.

4. To cover a wound with medicaments.

In time of my sickness another surgeon dressed her.

5. To curry; to rub: a term of the stable.

Our infirmities are so many, that we are forced to dress and tend horses and asses, that they may help out needs.

Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Stood ready, shining all, and smoothly dress'd.

6. To break or teach a horse; a term of horsemanship.

A freed
Well mouth'd, well manag'd, which himself did dress.

His aid in war, his ornament in peace.

7. To rectify; to adjust.

Adam! will my we labour still to dress This garden? Still to tend plant, herb, and flower?

Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of torment instead of bark.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps he shall burn incense.

When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or sprigs.

10. To prepare victuals for the table.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress,
For his fat grace fire some delicious meats,
In feeding high his art will surpass,
And he appears it of the wanton race.

DRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresses laughed at in our forefathers wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity they are brought about, we think beaming.

A robe obscene was offer'd to the doors below,
A dress by faces and by feet worn slow.

2. Splendid clothes; habit of elegance.

Full dress creates dignity, augments confidence, and keeps at distance an encroacher.

3. The skill of adjusting dresses.

The men of profane, witty, and gallantry.

DRESSER. n. f. [from dress.]

1. One employed in putting on the clothes and adorning the person of another.

She humbles all her hand-maids to the task;
Her head alone will twenty dresses ask.

2. One employed in regulating, trimming, or adjusting any thing.

So in the vineyard, the dresser of the vineyard, before these three years I came seeking fruit in this vineyard, and find none.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is dress'd or prepared for the table.

The dresser, a table to be used
When dressing meat. When the dresser is used, How the dresser is used, being it from the kitchen.

4. And love it as to me that love it not?

A dresser in her hall she had,
Of which so many a tender soul she made.

When you take down dishes, tip a dozen upon the dresser.

DRESSING. n. f. [from dress.] The application made to a fore.

The second day after we took off the dressings, and found an ulcer made by the catheter.

DRESSINGROOM. n. f. [dress and room.]
The room in which clothes are put on.

Little books ought to be bound every day in dressing room, if it were carefully taught.

His binding horns, and kindly clapt his breast.

To DRIB. v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word.
Merchants' gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains drabs a part.

To DRIBBLE. v. a. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages: drop, drip, dripple, dribble, thence drivel and driveller. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drapp.]

1. To fall in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface owe their form to the dribbling of water that pooled over.

A dribbling, dribbling, and a dribbling fountain at once may be seen. Drizzle is a dribbling of rain.

2. To fall weakly and slowly.

Believe not that the dribbling of a drizzle can pierce a complete bosom.

3. To flaver as a child or idiot.

To DRIBBLE. v. a. To throw down in drops.

Let the cook follow with a ladle full of soup, and dribble it all the way up stairs.

DARBLST. n. f. [from dribble.] A small sum; odd money in a sum.

Twelve long years of exile borne,
Twice twelve we number'd once his bliss return;
So *drab*ly were they left to pay,
Even to the drab of a day.

DARBA. n. f. [from dray.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture; a defecative.

There is a drab, that boiling of drab made in milk, which it is certain are great drabs, will make dogs drab.

DRIFT. n. f. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will not follow the impulse of his own sense, but will be impelled, and, by a stronger impulse, turn in another way.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty drift, half sent with rugged drift,
Dust rose about the drift, and fell with drift.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some drift, perhaps upon the waters thrown,
An drift of drift, which *drift*ly *drift*ly *drift*ly
And hollow'd, fill a drift of *drift*ly *drift*ly
And drift some *drift*ly *drift*ly *drift*ly *drift*ly.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready drift hand;
Swift as on wings of wind upon *drift*ly *drift*ly
And *drift*ly *drift*ly *drift*ly *drift*ly *drift*ly.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our drift from the South
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind; as, a drift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.

The drift of every act, proceeding *drift*ly from *drift*ly, is not able to *drift*ly, and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works.

Their drift comes known and they discover'd are:
For some, of many, will be false of course.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he drifts nobody.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the drift.
This, by the title, the manner, and the drift.
'Twas thought could be the work of none but drift.

To DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow, no larger than many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds in every plain.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorized.

He wanders on
From hill to dale, still more and more *drift*ly, Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps.

To DRILL. v. a. [from drillen, Dutch; drillen, Sax. from drugh, through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill pierces a piece of drill iron, fixed upon a drill board, which is on both an drill and a drill way into it, to let the drill end of the drill of the drill, when you drill a hole.

By our author, with all his drowsy reasoning,

And these have been capable of. Steeley.

DRUB. v. a. [druber, to kill, Dan.]

To thrash; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

He that is vaunt, and dares fight,

Though he be a knave, can lose no honour by't.

Butler.

The thief had been found out, and had been cudgelled.

Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it be more than weight, I should have been drub'd. Butler.

DRUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A thump;

a knock; a blow.

The wits and drub I have receiv'd,

Has madd'nd my body, and bereav'd

My sense of strength. Hadley.

Beating an unfortunate nark on their faces,

They have exposted them to innumerable drubs. Add, on

DRUDGE. v. n. [dreccan, to vex,

Saxon; draghen, to carry, Dutch.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

A crack'd fiddle, and hoarse talour,

Like a drudge, did drudge and labour. Butler.

The poor sleep little we must learn to watch

On drowsy late, and early every morning,

Must we not toil of their claid and fed w't spare? Butler.

Rule to our toils, and drudge away the day.

Add, on

Advant'ge obtained by industry, directed to piety, can never be expected from a drudge. Butler.

So he came to the city,

And found his horse his voice at the gate,

To draw water, and to draw w't draw. Butler.

I made no such bargain with you, to live as a drudge. Dryden's Persius.

What is an age, in dull remembrance

Of a single hour of love is more. Butler.

DRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this drudge, laid claim to me. Shadwell.

He is above, and laughs the while

At us, ordain'd his drudge, to execute

His master's wrath that bid. Milton.

Alas, our slaves

Our empire, at the pulch'rous shrine of

And dail' thou at our tending and Command,

Dispute thy coming? Milton's Ages.

He is content to be their drudge,

And on their errands gladly trudge. Hadley.

The hard master makes men serve him for naught, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame, and sorrow, and misery.

Tillotson.

DRUDGE. n. f. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. Shakespeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorize them? Le Fèvre.

You do not know the heavy grievances,

The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries

Which they impose. Southey's Greeney.

To thee that drudgery of power I give;

Cares to thy lot assign thou, and let me live.

Dryden.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow.

Le Fèvre.

Even Drudge himself,

As at the cart he takes his daily news

The police drum, I say, Butler.

It is now hard to find every day's work, and condemned to drudge. Butler.

DRY

DRU'MSTICK. n. f. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn' when rising on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short attack;
Then hallow'd to be drunk, the business of the day.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood.

DRU'NKARD. n. f. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on my sword to get opinion Of my more fierce endeavour. I've been drunkard.

Do more than this in fight.

My bowmen are not to be let loose.

But, like a drunken man, I'm in a lurch.

God will not let the drunkard's cause, that he has to long occasion of himself to intemperate drinking, that he can't leave it off.

DRU'NKEN. adj. [from drunk.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a lion he lies!

So, I will profess on this drunken man.

Drunk men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine that things come upon them; they see well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

3. Saturated with moisture.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.

4. Done in a state of inebriation.

When your casters, or your waiting waiters,
Have done a drunken laughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon,
parsons.

We should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake.

DRU'NKENLY. adv. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already, like the gelman,
Hath thou kept out, and drunkenly carous'd.

DRU'NKENNESS. n. f. [from drunken.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedæmonians trained up their children to have drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company.

3. Intoxication or inebriation of any kind;
disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not contrrollable by reason.

DRY. adj. [dry, Saxon.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry.

2. Not moist.

When God laid,
He gather'd now, ye waters under heaven,
Into one place, and let dry land appear!

3. Not moist.

Of unbid elements the spot;
From clear to cloudy soil, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist.

DRY

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a showering April between.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drink him dry as hay;

Sleep shall neither night nor day,

Hang upon his penthouse lid;

He shall have a man to bid.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decay more deadly bring,

As a north wind burns a too forward spring;

Give sorrow vent, and let the fumes go.

5. Thirsty; a-thirst.

So dry he was for fury,

Vind of a bulky charger near their lips,

With which in often interrupted sleep,

Their flying blood compels to inigate

Their dry fur'd tongues.

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished;
without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our style in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not wanting or wanting with faretched descriptions: either is a vice.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within or without the fabric; a piece not to dry as the mere contentment of propositions; and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself.

That the fire burns by heat is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.

Authority and friendship work upon sense, dry and sober reason works upon others.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtleties with which the schools are filled.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament.

7. Hard; severe. [dry, anciently to endure; dry, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a stout or dry blow given?

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry beatings us'd to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Not a dry diet.

To DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arid; to exsiccate.

The man was well, if you were so contented.
— I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and d' away.

Heat dries bodies, that do easily expire, as parchment, leather, roots, and clay; and so dries time away.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best.

The running streams are deep;

See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were up one

With her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that flood considering in her eyes.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her veil the wound she wipes and dries.

See, at your bliss returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow's eye in mourning
Dries up her tears.

DRY

4. To scorch with thirst.

Their honourable men are famished, and multitude d'ied up with thirst.

5. To drain; to exhaust.

Ruth's labour, in an evil hour,
Dried an immeasurable bowl, and thought
To exhale his sweat by irragious sleep,
Imprudent: him death's lion sleep opprest.

6. To DRY up. To deprive totally moisture; to take all moisture away.

The water of the sea, which formerly was in, was in time exhale'd and d'ied up by heat.

To DRY. v. n. To grow dry; to be moisture; to be drained of its moisture.

DRY'ER. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.

The all effects of drinking are relieved by plant, which is a great drier and opener, effectually by perspiration.

DRY'ED. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.

Sight to deform what heart of rock could hold Dry'd behind? Adam could not, but wept.

DRY'Y. adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how the king had been used by his council, did this to recover the king's affection.

Wouldst thou to honour and preferences climb
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves
For virtue is but dry'd praise, and flares.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornaments or embellishment.

Some drier plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.

DRY'NESS. n. f. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccidity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiar scorched and torrid by the sun, by heat the soil, from want and defect of water.

Such was the disease which did his life
Form, under, beauty through the arid fire
While drier moisture, coldness heat, and dry,
All that we have, and that we are, is lost.

2. Want of succulence.

His vacancy with his voluptuosity,
Full insects, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for a.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres.

3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and aqualor, if not checked carefully.

Be faithful where the author excels, and para-

They are ever talking of new taxes, and the owners in, getting them customers, as the common dunnies do in making them pay.

DUR

DUPE. n. f. [duppe, French; from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

A usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some big tyrant.
But slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same.

DUPP. v. a. [from the noun.] To lack; to cheat.
He throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Each is through piety, and dup'd through wit.

DUPLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; repeated.

DUPPLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Lat.] To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.
And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our unimpaired sentiments.

DUPPLICATE. adj. [from the verb.] To fold together.

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical progression, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second: for 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 1 to 4 is a duplicate of that of 1 to 2, or as the square of 2 to the square of 1.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocal in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the centre of the globe, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drops, and its touching each globe in a larger surface, and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting matter.

DUPPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more useful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the duplication of the first, to which end I have received duplicates of the most considerable.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems.

DURANCE. n. f. [from durance, law Fr.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailer; a prison.

Try Dol, and Hell of thy noble thoughts,
Is in the durance and outrageous prison;
Hail'd thither by mechanic duty hands.

A poor, innocent, fawning stranger, as gushing in durance, up in the false accusation of a young, insolent, wealthy woman.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide;

In dungeons scarce three miles wide.
Notwithstanding the warning and example too
For me, I commit myself to durance.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

A doubtful word.

See in turn, that instant trembled sound,
And motion with light as the felt the wound;
Or how that durance was this new made state!

How to me cometh thy heaven's love, be it late!

DURATION. n. f. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession.

2. Power of continuance.

Durance is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned in the attainment of them.

3. Length of continuance.

Antiquity, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it.

TO DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure.

DUS

DURFUL. adj. [from dure and ful.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

My durful look, while life is not yet dried,

EAGLESTONE. n. f. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it,
a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken, and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, is called the name. The analogy between a stone thus containing another within it, or, as it is, thus containing another within it, or, as the fossil writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and be an accelerating or retarding delvery; to be applied to the arm of a woman with child, to prevent abortion; and if to the leg, it promoted delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was called all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill.
If you stop the holes of a hawk's bill it will make no noise, but a flat noise or rattle; and so do the eites, or eaglestones, which hath a little noise within it. Bacon.

EAGLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

ness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having driven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest towers. S. Jany.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

E A R

EA'RLY. adj. [ear, Saxon. before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a faint d'weller of the flock,
Meekest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and to let me.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some late.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipp'd; time pass'd, and the world, and the things in the first and most necessary of the church, what could he do more to save the people, and to his honour?

The nymphs, that in the early dawn of day,
Their early music and their early dance bring.

Sickness is a cruel plague, it strikes us in the flower of our youth, and gives us no time to think of it.

EA'RLY. adj. [from the adjective.] Soon; betime.

Early in the morning, with cheerful ray,
The morn'g us of bright beauty, and of day.

To EARN. v. a. [earnen, Saxon.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have paid us with the reward great Perils, are the objects of our pity, for men it is That they earn their honours daily.

What is the cause of the great report,
Which we through hazard have must earn.

I in the evil turn
My obvious break; aiming to overcome
By fasting, and earn rest from labour won.

Men may discern
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit could my Sun.

To earn salvation for the loss of men.
Since they all beg, it were better for the state
To keep them, even although they cannot working Grant's Bill of Mortality.

This is the great expense of the poem, that takes up almost all their earnings.

The poems gained the plagiarist's wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a flock of pence and praise,
The labour's grown the critic's prey.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say more;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might the addendum earn,
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

EA'RNEST. adj. [earnest, Saxon.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.]
Tremour or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stop'd, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being piecemeal assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the shells, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and convulsion which we call an earthquake.
Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me:
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul. Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

bour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like.

Cowell.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.
Stands more easily, and at great distance;
but they require a medium well disposed;
and their transmission is easily stopped. Boiss.

See still the reason of his woe;
She sigh'd, but with an air and mien
That made it easy to be seen.

She fear'd too much to know. Pope.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if instead of passing your life as well and easy, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easy resign to others the praise of your Blackness family. Dryden's Ded. to Scars of Love
Not from proud'st, she easy forgives;
And much the softer, as the much believes. Pope.

EA'SINESS. n. s. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.
Believe me, friends, had turn to are not laid
With half the eastness that they are said.

Ben Jonson.
Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength.

Lucie.
The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered.

Dryden.
You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,
And for whole eastness I aim to be giv'd. Dryden

This plea, under a show of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms
it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto form to one thing might happily put them in hope, that some would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them.

Haller.
Since the custom of easiness to sleep and change from is so evil, no doubt it is to bear a tolerable fare is better than to venture on a dangerous experiment. Haller.

Give it him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness, save his life, how, when you have done, look to your own. Shaksp.

The best way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundation of it in liberality, and in easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not close;
not formality.

E A S

Abdullah had my dark thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming eastness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dregs. Rafsanjani.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and eastness we enjoy when asleep. Roy.

EAST. n. s. [eort, Saxon; east, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the west.

They counting forwards towards the east, did allow 150 degrees to the Portugals eastward. Abbas.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakspere's Measure

The gorgeous east, with richest hands,
Pours on her kings barbarick, pearl and gold. Met.

EA'STER. n. s. [eastre, Saxon; oester, Dutch.] The day on which the christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? Shakspere.

Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism.

Dryden's Pers.

EA'STERLING. n. s. [from east.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquish'd
Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings. Spenser.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EA'STERLY. adj. [from east.]

1. Coming from the parts toward the east.

When the east's winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the valleys, whereby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceedingly unwholesome. Rafsanjani.

2. Lying toward the east.

They give us a view of the most east's, southerly, and westerly parts of England. Granger.

3. Looking toward the east.

Water he chafes clear, light, without taste, a smell, drawn from springs with an east's eye, or flow. Shakspere.

EA'STERN. adj. [from east.]

1. Dwelling or found in the east; oriental.

Like eastern kings a gay state they keep Eastern tyrants from the sight of heaven
Seclude their holom caves. Shakspere.

2. Lying or being toward the east.

The east's end of the life rises up in precipice
And goes. Shakspere.

3. Going toward the east.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her east's or westerly voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coast, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, so can easily be known to any coast day or night how much she is gone northward or southward. Shakspere.

4. Looking toward the east.

The angel caught
Our lingering parents, and to the east's gate Led them direct. Shakspere.

EA'STWARD. adv. [east and toward.]

Toward the east.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, goes eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set. Shakspere.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?

E A T

Refound, as far as I could eat my fight,
From op'ning heaven, I saw descending light.
Dryden.

EA'SY. adj. [from easy.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet without very weighty, and of great respect. Haller.

How much is it in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, it easy for every one to try. Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy allents, and planted with a variety of palaces.
Shakspere's Measure

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmobiled; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges or employment. Locke.

Keep your thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage interest easy, and a marriage where both are happy. Shakspere's Measure

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to the sciences. Locke.

A man should direct all his studies and exercises at making himself a good man, and a better citizen. Shakspere's Measure

We plainly feel what we are, and what we are, or uneasy, happy, or otherwise. Locke.

4. Free from pain.

Ed. advised to do so wide
That dismal world, if any time perhaps Might yield them some satisfaction. Shakspere.

Phenore has been the last of my life;
And every change of fortune is a new Revelation that was a new life. Shakspere.

5. Complplying; unfeeling; credulous.

Heard with reason not unpleasing,
Win me into the arms of the man,
And hug him into love. Shakspere.

With such deceit he gilds the truth, he Ties prone to credit his peridious art.
The kinder father I have ever lov'd,
Fond and good, and bounteous to my worth. Shakspere.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Play and he are one;
So merciful a king did never live,
To revenge, and easy to forgive. Shakspere.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of the same rest as would make them easy. Shakspere.

8. Not constrained; not formal.

There move easy that have learn'd to dance
Plane the easy vigour of a horse, Where Denham's strength, and Wall's in-victible join. Shakspere.

To EAT. v. a. preterit ate, or ate;
part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Saxon; etan, Gothick; etich, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which grows. Shakspere.

Other fruits cannot be secured for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyph-mus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not offend because it's mixed with a great quantity of sweet substance. Shakspere's Measure

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou hast of gold art worth of gold;
Other less fine in carat is more precious;
Preferring life in med'rine potable.
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most respected. Shakspere's Measure

Just eat thy leaves up. Shakspere's Measure

E A T

They entail a horrid curse upon their estates, which does either infinitely waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it.

Tillotson.

Eating carps,
Lydian airs. Milton.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound.

Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back ; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat.

Hakewell on Providence.

Credit were not to be lost

B't a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, perditionally, his word,
And sweats his ears through a two-inch board.

Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals ; to take meals ; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table.

Samuel.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eats with publicans and sinners?

Matthew.

2. To take food.

He that will eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, let it be as he that is infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but eat and perish.

Isa.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eats to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want.

Proverbs.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke ;
Care no more to cloath and eat.

Shakspeare.

But, thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat,
Since I have found the secret to be great.

Prior.

4. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials.

South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state.

Addison's Essay.

EATABLE. adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

EATABLE. n. f. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to every age.

King.

EATER. n. f. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribbees and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh.

Alfred.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats.

Shakspeare.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast?

Brown.

As if the knave grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other foals.

Hewell.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [eath, Saxon.] Easy ; not difficult. An old word.

Where ends abound, it's eath to do amiss.

An hungry traveller slept into an eatinghouse for his dinner.

L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. f. [eave, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes

With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd

To her unworthiness: it nothing stands us

To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,

As if his life lay on't.

Shakspeare.

His tears run down his beard, like winter drops

From eaves of reeds.

Shakspeare's Tempest.

If in the beginning of winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty winter.

Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,

When the gulf hath blown his fill,

Ending on the rustling leaves,

With minute drops from off the eaves.

Milton.

The eaves hang down from the eaves of houses.

Woodward.

To hear it any mean to think from me.

Shakspeare.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, epylob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide toward the sea ; opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass

Grind hot, and at the fresh wave largely drew,

As ebb'd that which made their flowing shrink

From standing, like to tripping ebb, that stole

With soft foot t'wards the deep.

Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,

And shove the laden vessel into port:

Then with a gentle ebb retire again,

And render back their cargo to the main.

Addison on Italy.

2. Decline ; decay ; waste.

You have finish'd all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb when you speak of.

Speker on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.

Rule of the Hesper.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away.

Rippon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet poetry was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining.

Dryden.

Near my apartment let him prisoner be,
That I his hourly ebb of life may see.

Dryden.

What is it he assures to?

Is it not this? To shed the flow remains,

His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.

Addison's Cato.

TO EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back toward the sea : opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood

Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,

Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea.

Shakspeare.

From thence the tide of fortune left them there,

And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.

Dryden's Esther.

2. To decline ; to decay ; to waste.

Well, I am standing water :

— I'll teach you how to flow.

9

E C C

—Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shakspeare, Temp.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!

For ever lovely stream, for ever stay! Halfax.

E'BN. } n. f. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard,
E'BN. } heavy, black, valuable wood,
E'BNY. } which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony or lignum vite, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods.

Muror.

Off by the winds extinct the signal lies,

Ere night has half toll'd round her ebony throne.

Gay.

EBRI'ETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness ; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed.

Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagrees ; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.

Baron.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emission: so also a craze and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

Brown's Vul. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalize and acid liquor ; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties.

Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts ; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal?

Newcom.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition ; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue.

Arbutnot.

ECCE'NTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus

ECCE'NTRICK. } Latin.]

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle : such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to them concentric, and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs.

Bacon.

To know his course he bends

Through the calm firmament ; but up or down

By centrick or eccentric hard to tell.

Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,

To save appearances : they gird the sphere

With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er

Circle and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentric?

Newcom's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point ; not directed by the same principle.

ECH

Whosoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he speaks them to his own ends: which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master. Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

The motion, like others of the times, seems eccentric and irregular. King Charles.

A character of our eccentric virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whatever we can to sense produce, Common and plain, or wondrous and astruse, From nature's constant or eccentric laws, The thoughtful soul the general inference draws, That an effect must presuppose a cause. Pope.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentric.]

1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown.

By reason of the eccentric orbit of the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move eccentrically. Haller.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account his excursions abroad, met no good news. Watson.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptical orbit. Harris.

ECCHYMOSIS. n. f. [from ecchymosis.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood, or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. W. Jones.

Quarries are accompanied with tumors and ecchymosis. W. Jones.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [from ecclesiastic.] ECCLESIASTICK } ecc., Latin]

Relating to the church; not civil.

To distinguish an ecclesiastical matter or civil; if ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers. Black.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of oblique terms, yet in the ecclesiastical writers, which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of England has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastical government. Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

A person dedicated to the ministrations of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Barnes's Theory.

ECCORROSTICKS. n. f. [from ecchorrostick.]

Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are ecchorrostick. Harris on the Plague.

ECHINATE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]

ECHINATED. } Bristled like a hedgehog; set with prickles.

1. A hedgehog.

2. A shellish set with prickles.

3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.

4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the rough sets of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with acanthus, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

ECHO. n. f. [from echo, Latin.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach the unfortunate Echo.

In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon's Natural History.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling Echo mocks the bounds, Replying shrilly to the well-tuned horse, As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakespeare.

With thou hunt!

Thy bounds shall make the welkin answer them, And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth. Sidney.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bowers!

With other echoes here I taught your shades To answer, and rebound far other song! Milton.

To you I mourn, and to the dead I sing;

The woods shall answer, and the echo ring. Pope.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence,

The sound must form an ode to the sense. Pope.

To ECHO. v. a.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting

All the church echo'd. Shakespeare. Tempest of Shrew.

Through rocks and caves the name of Deity bounds;

Del a each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!

Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her murd'ring princes hear the echoing name,

And, Atrides, dread thy wrath and awful voice. Blackmore.

To ECHO. v. a. To send back a voice;

to return what has been uttered.

Our echoings do but echo the same note. Dryden's Essay.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;

Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden's Essay.

One great death defers the dreary ground;

The echo'd woe from distant rocks resound. Pope.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.]

The éclaircissement ended in the discovery of the impostor. Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour;

show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and clat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of saying his heroes by each other. Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLIPSE. v. f. [from eclipse.]

Selecting; choosing at will.

Choose thou of the eclipse best, and choose out of each best position as comes nearest truth. Watson on the Mind.

ECL

ECLIPSE. n. f. [from eclipse.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE. v. f. [from eclipse.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven: the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Asilus alludes.

Sign of yew,

Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse

Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So though the sun victorious be,

And from a dark eclipse set free,

The influence, which we fondly fear,

Affects our thoughts the following year. Wallis.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Lace.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Raleigh.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our ecclesiastical and ecclesiastical. King's Lib.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipse'd moon her throne resign. Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the darken'd moon

Would seem to all eclipse'd as well as we. Crack.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair day,

Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shakespeare.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had been tokens of more than com's a greatness, howsoever now eclipse'd with lustre. Sidney.

Praise him to his father:—

—Let the prince's eclipse

Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Dromio's Story.

Let other muses write his prophetic fate,

Of conquest's nations tell, and kings' eclipse;

But mine shall sing of his eclipse and eclipse.

What! like the sun's, more wonderful eclipse. Shakespeare.

He descended from his Father, and eclipse'd the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Carney's Sermon.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king that her husband was eclipse'd in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had showed towards him. Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself eclipse'd

All power, and us eclipse'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [from eclipse.]

A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiac, and making an angle with the equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23° 30'.

which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line.

This line is drawn on the globe; but in the new astronomy the eclipse is that part among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from west to east.

If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

E C O

All stars that have their distance from the equator northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator.

The terraqueous globe had the same fix and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptic, but inclined in like manner as it is at present.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which, passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptic, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation.

ECLIPSE. adj. Described by the ecliptic line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day; The sun revolving through the ecliptic way, Effects the various seasons of the year.

E'CLOGUE. n. f. [eclogia.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

W. T. exclaiming praises Basilus gave this rhyme any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem bright.

vacuum. Leibniz

1. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem to be creatures placed, as it were, on the edges of several provinces, and participating in the qualities of either. Hall
Sometimes the sun has either tropic view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.
Drayton's Nymph.

It is used sometimes of more than two;
any one of a certain number.

Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were to provide, as it were, a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would let the balance of Europe ought again. Bacon

EITHER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or: either the one or the other.

We never heard of any ship that had been sent to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Can us to alter th' order now assign'd? Drayton

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Shakespeare to Pope.

EJULATION. n. f. [ejulatio, Lat.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and psalms, he breaks out into ejaculations and effeminate wailings.

Government of the Tongue.

torted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastic engines did the rear
The hairy tail, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pressure, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastic, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton's Optics

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tenderness; in some being too lax and weak, in others too rigid and strong. Deluc

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastic power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Berthollet

E L B

ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastic.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A juve-ding will bear an hundred weight without rupture, but at the first time cannot exert its elasticity, take away fifty, and immedi-

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elds rise. Shakespeare.

2. Ancestors.

Give the gods, if it will be no better, e'en thy head as your elds have done before you. Shakespeare.

I am my father, and I own it too,
Where I was a century, not as bad, but new;
Where, if I had, I had break all season's laws;
Thou hast demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recounting of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and example of their elders. Spenser's State of Ire.

At the board, and in private, it very well be-cometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to lay Amen. Hunter.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.
First-bitten tyrod, and assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elds; and like the rule
Chaos of presbytery, where laymen rule
With the same woulpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

E'LDERSHIP. n. s. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had society of people, underwent no other dominion than patriarchy and eldership. Shakespeare.

That all should Abithach adore, his true;
But some respect to my birthright due
My claim to her by elds prove. Dryden.

Not were the elds of
Of Arminians worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's intrench did not prop his cause. Shakespeare.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Bera and Ephraim, about the matter of ex-communication; wherein there ought to be in all churches an eldership having power to excommunicate, and a part of that elds to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the lay. Hunter.

E'LDON. adj. The superlative of old, now changed to old [eal, ealder, ealder, Saxon.]

But natural necessity, begot.

As charity is, nothing can more luster and beauty than a prudent election, which is a judgment, and a fit application of it to them. Shakespeare.

2. The power of choice.

For what can I do but a moving man,
Which is a judgment, and a fit application of it to them.
Now if God's power should be election,
Her mind is then wondrous, and it stands. Shakespeare.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon me, and I turn to him, and live; he tells us, that I have let before and death, and referred it to our own which we will choose. Shakespeare.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discernment of these elds is not to be but out of a very un-which to discernment, and a fit application of it to them.
It is the best option of the elds. Shakespeare.

In favour, to be sure, with much difference and election is good, for it makes those preferred more than others, and the rest more odious. Shakespeare.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The consent about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been results in the process of nature. Shakespeare.

persons put up for the next election. Shakespeare.

E'LECTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and absolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be better and absolute as an hereditary. Shakespeare.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem better of less force, and unalter for action abroad. Shakespeare.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there is no choice; whereas all moral goodness consists in the elective act of the unbiassed mind. Shakespeare.

E'LECTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to the other.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into that mortally electively, I am not subtle enough to discover. Shakespeare.

They work not electively, or upon pure to themselves an end of their operations. Shakespeare.

E'LECTOR. n. s. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

E L E

Of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. s. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law;
and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison's Freeholder.

ELECTRE. n. s. [from electrum, Latin.]

Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELECTRICAL. adj. [from electrum.]
ELECTRICK. s. See ELECTRE.

Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies I do I conceive not such only as take up big it bodies, in which number the electrically placed jet and amber, but such as, consequently placed, attract all bodies palpable.
Brown.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its effluvia to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded till it fills a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or steel-gird, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

It is that at ratiom were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderful what Helmont declared concerning a glass, wherein the magdery of his solution was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Ferguson.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light.

Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRICITY. n. s. [from electric. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, but excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere or glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instan-taneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosopher are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. s. [from electarium, Calus
Aurel. which is now written electuary.]

A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consilience of honey.

Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consilience is too thin, ferment; and when

too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEMO'SYNARY. adj. [from elemosyna.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glammille's Scripsi.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

ELEGANCE. s. n. s. [from elegantia, Latin.]

ELEGANCY. s. n. s. [from elegantia, Latin.]

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Barnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety.
In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether
Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art.
Spectator.

ELEGANT. adj. [from elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing by number beauties.
To flatter themselves are elegant in him. Pope.
These may it thou find some elegant retreat.
London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Write with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the taste of lofty,
mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegant's writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Racine.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty;
with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegant's, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses.
Pope's Daphny, Notes.

ELEGIACK. adj. [from elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Used in elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gray.

ELEGY. n. s. [from elegus, Latin.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forthwith denoting the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegies. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

ELEMENT. n. s. [from elementum, Latin.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made,
should lose the qualities which now they have.
Horace.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles.
Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Hales.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the elements shew to him as it doth to me. Shakespeare.

My dearest sister face thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakespeare.

The king,
Contending with the fretful element,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakespeare King Lear.
The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his standing ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing; as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such dabbry as is beyond our elements. Shakespeare.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element,
and that logic is none of their talent.

Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—One fate that promises no element.
In such a business. Shakespeare Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences;
the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners.
Hales.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage
under the elements of the world. Paul.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

To ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question.
Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublimity, fever's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which it elemented. Dante.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour shew;
That fad's mixture shall at once declare Winds, is n, and storms, and elemental war.
Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And up with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, [not properly, that is by temperamental contraries, ocult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy;
but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins,
and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTARY. n. f. [from elementary.]

The simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbuthnot.

2. Initial; rude.

ELEMI. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Ethiopia in flatish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The indigenous of American elemi, a moist, the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELENCH. n. f. [elenchos, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

ELEOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cider countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Shakespeare.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakespeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, an elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Virgil.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

TO ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the chafers. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and free. Milton.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it aims not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vitious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alleged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

ELEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.]

Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With towers and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Watson.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown.

ELEVATOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chiralurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. adj. [ænbleven, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcus, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakespeare.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

E.L.F. n. f. plural elvers. [elf, Welsh.

Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy spirit,
Hop as light as hued from briar. Shakespeare.

Fairy elvers,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elvs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on every green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elvers by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elvs.
And are but failures to set up ourselves. Dryden.
However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it to well of him! Shakespeare.

TO ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To tangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-loc. Hamm.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

ELFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought Unto that elfin knight he bade him stay,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

ELFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knot of hairs twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which once untangl'd, much misfortune bode! Shakespeare.

TO ELICITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, as explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Man.

He elicits those acts out of the meer laps'd life of human nature. Chrysostom.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hamm.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. Stuart.

ELICITATION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.] That elicitation which the schools intend, as a deducing of the power of the will into act; that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Franklin.

TO ELIDE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hobbes.

ELIGIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Sermons.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is which, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarke.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMIN'ATION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dis.

ELISION. n. f. [eliso, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, can't the attempt, there is an elision of a syllable. You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elison of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon.

ELIXATION. n. f. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliments, and its elization in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabic.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the flow'r, Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odorous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing. In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. Seneca.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance. What wonder then, if fields and regions here Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. L.

ELK. n. f. [elc, Saxon.] A large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in winter is greyish, in summer it is paler. The horns of the male are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heavy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumbering silent in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue: life's poor span
Makes not an ell by trilling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLIPSIS. n. f. [ἑλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis. Rom. iv. 18.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins' Dædalus.
The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbits, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Having the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptical orbits in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptical. Chyney.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Chyney's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. f. [ulmus, Lat. elm, Saxon.]

1. A tree.

The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out: especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows, upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and then shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees: because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural fear,
Whose lusty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakspeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Waller.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whole rattle, too long laboured, at first essay Gave elocution to the mute, and taught The tongue not made for speech to speak the praise. Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought to sound, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words.

As I have endeavour'd to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express the thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. f. [elogie, French.] Praise; panegyric.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Warton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject.

Hold's Elements of Speech.

To E'LOIGNER. v. a. [eloigner, French.]

To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now difused.

From worldly care himself he did eloin,
And greatly shunn'd man's exercise. F. Queen.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though the elogy me thus,
And how patiently shall know it too. Donne.

To ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection which is now elongated and mayed eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To ELONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brazil, the fourth point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the west; but elongating from the coast of Brazil, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward. Brown.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation; when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongation are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. W. man's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glantille's Spectis.

5. Departure; removal.

Not then had it been placed in a middle point,
But that of descent or elongation. Brown.

To ELOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dut.]

To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison.

What from the dame can Paris hope?

She may as well from him elope. Prior.
The husband who eloped some thence a quarter,
For matrimonial solace does a martyr. Pope.

ETOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power; commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Aspley's Paragon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Archbush.

E L S

E'LOPS. n. f. [elops, Latin.] A fish: reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and alps, and amphibia due,
Ceratops horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipters. Milton's Par. Lost.

E'LOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shaksp. Coriolanus

Athena or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute. Milton

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. H. G.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say the be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say the utter'd piercing eloquence. Shaksp.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.

Oh death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [elley; Saxon.] Other; one beside: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand named with travel, and five dings with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if the else were nothing else to be done but to feed him. Shaksp.

Should he or any else touch, he will find evidence of the Divine Will. H. G.

He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham

ELSE. adv.

3. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, as I think proper to view;
This task has else, not thine to witness;
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dr. J.

What ways are there whereby we thould be assisted, but either by an internal inspiration of a God or by an outward ministry of else by far external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found
And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dr. J.

EM'BERING. n. f. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good to many ways,
Keep emb'ring well, and fasting days;
What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturday, and Wednesday. Tisser.

EM'BERS. n. f. without a singular [εμψυρια, Saxon, ashes; einmyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopp'd, let it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heav'n's brightest counsellors, by the low footsteps of their efforts, he trac'd too well,
He toft his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Cicero.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

EM'BERWEEK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Marschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, after the first

E M B

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'st where tow'rs on battlements
Should rise,

Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from emblematical.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLEMA'TIST. n. f. [from emblem.] A writer or inventor of emblems.

These tables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematis, and heralds. Brown.

EMBO'LISM. n. f. [εμβολισμος.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manner in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embo'lisms or equinocties, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could. Hobbes.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

EM'BO'LUS. n. f. [εμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels by an embo'lus, like the heart. Abraham.

To EMBO'SS. v. a. [from boffe, a protuberance, French.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embo'ss'd booty,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakespeare.

Thou art a bil,

A plague sore, or embo'ss'd carbuncle,

In my corrupted blood. Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh embo'ss,

And all his people. Milton's Par. Lost.

All crowd in heaps, as at a night-alarm

The bees drive out upon each other's back;

I' embo'ss their hives in clusters. Dryden.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

Then o'er the lofty gate has art embo'ss'd

Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost. Dryden's Ptolem.

3. [from embo'sser, French, to enclose in a box.] To enclose; to include; to cover.

The knight his thrilling spear again assay'd

In his brass-plated body to embo'ss.

Like that self begotten hind

In th' Arabian woods embo'ss'd. Milton's Agonist.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embo'ss: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embo'ss, from boffe, French, a tumour. Hannet.

EMB

- Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Theffaily
Was never to embof. Shakspere.
We have almost embof him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shakspere.
- EMBO'SSMENT. n. f. [from embofs.]
1. Any thing standing out from the rest;
jut; eminence.
I with alio in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-bread; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embofments.
Bacon.
2. Relief; rising work.
They are at a loss about the word pendentis;
some fancy it expresses only the great embofment

EMBRACEMENT. n. f. [from embrace.]
1. Clasp in the arms; hug; embrace.
Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
And hopes with foul embracements her to get,
In whose decay virtue's fair thine must fall.
Sidon.
- These cherishing one another with dear, though chaste embracements, with sweet, though cold kisses, it might seem that love was come to play him there without darts. Sidon.
2. Hostile hug; grapple.
Tuttle beats, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet; and to this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement.
Sidon.
3. Comprehension.
Nor can her wide embracements filled be.
Davies.
4. State of being contained; enclosure.
The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracements of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon's Natural History.
5. Conjugal endearment.
I would fain enjoy in that absence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would lose most love. Shakspere.
- EMBRACER. n. f. [from embrace.] The person embracing.
Yet are they the greatest embracers of pleasure of any other upon earth; and they esteem of pearls as pebbles, so they may satisfy their gull, in point of pleasure or revenge. Howell.

4. To attack; to meet in the front.

ENC

Which way soever we turn, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity.

5. To oppose; to to oppugn.
Jurons are not bound to believe two witnesses, if the probability of the fact does reasonably encounter them.

6. To meet by accident.
I am most fortunate thus to encounter you: You have ended my business, and I will merily accompany you home.

7. To ENCOUNTER. v. n.
1. To rush together in a hostile manner; to conflict.

As duels the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall and die.

Five times, Marcius,
Have I fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat.

2. To engage; to fight: it has with before the thing.

Our wars
Will turn into a peaceful comick sport,
When ladies crave to be encountered with.
Both the wings of his fleet had begun to encounter with the Christians.
Those who have most dread of death, must be content to encounter with it, whether they will or no.

3. To meet face to face.
4. To come together by chance.

ENCOUNTER. n. f. [from encounter.]
1. Opponent; antagonist; enemy.

The lion will not kick with his feet, but he will strike such a stroke with his tail, that he will break the back of his encounterer with it.
The doctrines of the reformation have kept the field against all encounterers.

2. One that loves to accost others. An old term.

On these encounterers, to guilt of tongue,
They give a cooling welcome to it come;
And wide unclasp the talles of their thoughts
To every foolish tale.

ENCOURAGE. v. a. [encourager, Fr.]
1. To animate; to incite to any thing.

They encourage good lives and evil none.

2. To give courage to; to support the spirits; to inspirit; to embolden.

Kinds of music encourage men, and make them valiant, or make them soft and effeminate.

ENCOURAGEMENT. n. f. [from encourage.]
1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.

2. Increase of confidence.

Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and example gives: nor small Encouragement, Godolphin, wilt and I. Phil. p.

As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome those arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince.

ENCROACH. v. n. [accrocher, from croc, a hook, French.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide.

And do encroach upon death's side.
Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives darts and affright;
And every moment rises to the light,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light.

ENCROACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The usurpation that creeps voluntarily, and by degrees mingles itself with the just, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd Ophion, with Lucretia, the wide Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule Of high Olympus.
Next, fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground.

ENCROACHER. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroacher on the deep,
Gain'd by degrees huge tracts of land,
'Till Neptune, with one general sweep,
Turn'd all again to barren ground.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

For the creature's ingenuity, argument, confounding, and keeps at distance an encroacher.

ENCROACHMENT. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority.

He is so per his encroachment proud Stays not on man: to God his tow'rd intends Singe, and defiance.
If it be a man's known principle to do, it
From his right, all men will make unjust encroachments upon him.

2. Advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their colonies within the very borders of it.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments.

END

To ENCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, Fr.]

1. To clog; to load; to impede.
We have, by this many years experience, found that exceeding great goods, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience.

Encumber'd with his veil, without defence.

2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obfruct.

The venetian is encumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself.

The god awak'd,
And thrice in vain he shook his wing,

Encumber'd with a broken thing.

3. To load with debts: as, his estate is encumbered with mortgages.

ENCUMBRANCE. n. f. [from encumber.]

1. Clog; load; impediment.
Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, considering them as unnecessary encumbrances of life.

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it.

2. Excessiveness; useless addition.

Strip from the braving Ajax then your loads,
The huge encumbrance of his buckler, sword.

3. Burden upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain his stability.

ENCYCLICAL. adj. [ἐκκλησιαστικός.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal fees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria.

ENCYCLOPEDIA. n. f. [ἐγκυκλοπαιδεία.]

ENCYCLOPEDIA. n. f. [ἐγκυκλοπαιδεία.] The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopaedia, and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that, while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapidity of the wheel, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the false wheel of the other.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopaedia.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopaedia, especially such as serves for a general education for an able politician.

ENCYSTRD. adj. [ἐνυστρός.] Enclosed in a vessel or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained.

END. n. f. [ἐν, Saxon.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.

Johnson paid for the end of the book, but was in his hand, and kept it in a convenient.

2. Extremity or last part in general.

The extremity and corners of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into it: it is endless, except in that it can never finish, nor conclude any end.

3. The last particle of any assignable duration.

Behold the day grown to an end.
At the end of two months she returned.

If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now towards each doth bend,
Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end.

4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.

END

Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Genesi.

Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end.
Brown's Epic Poetry.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.

Better is the end than the beginning thereof. Ecclesi.

6. The conclusion or last part of any thing; as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

7. Ultimate state; final doom.

enormities of the government. Spenser.
That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant. Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison's Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany; crimes exceeding the common measure.
In this sense it has a plural.
It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities, the practice may be proved by example. Swift.

our feelings, for the enormity of our works, what should hinder them, from measuring the mass by the disciples? Dean of St. Peter.

ENO

ENOUGH. adj. [zenoh, Saxon; ganab, Gothick; genog, Dutch.] It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enough is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb; except that after the verb To have, or To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf. In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why wouldst thou go, with one consent they cry,
When thou hast gold enough, and Emily? Dryd.

When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENOUGH. n. f.

1. To inwrap; to cover; to invest with some integument.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night
envlop you, good provost. Shakspeare.

A cloud of smoke envlops either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:
Darkling they join adu'rsely, and thick unseen,
Couriers with couriers jostling, men with men.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locke.

Nocturnal shades
This world envelop, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts.
Philips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Darkned with filthy dust. Fairy Queen.

ENVELOPE. n. f. [French.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument;

a cover.

Send thee to paper-sparing Pope;
And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

To ENVE'NOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To taint with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unhated and envenom'd. Shakspeare.

Atides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Thebanian pines.
Milton.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fume
Of harmless men. Philips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shakspeare.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the poison
dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;

ENV

That thus envy'd she might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to spite her house and husband's age. Dryden.

ENVIALE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; (such as may excite envy.)

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves. Carew.

ENVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues. Bacon's Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Apoes; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever exist'd did the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor could bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakespeare.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither he thou envious at the wicked. Prov.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be.
Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duffus.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprise me at my book!
And sure as they lie alive at night,
As soon as gone, will show their spite. Swift.

TO ENVIRON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakespeare.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as to many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks stood the city.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,

He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, till mischief and despair.

Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare.
Since the must go, and I must mourn, come night,

Environ me with darkness whilst I write.
Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

ENV

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears. Shakespeare.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me.
Milton.

4. To enclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of honour all environ. Cleaveland.

ENVIRONS. n. f. [environs, Fr.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

TO ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Lat.]

To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate
the kinds of sin wherein you know yourself guilty. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Besides enumerating the gods defect of duty to the queen, I show now all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. f. [enumeratio, Lat.]

The act of numbering or counting over;
number told out.

Whoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements.

TO ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Lat.]

To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIATION. n. f. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; public attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expression.

ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.]

Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ascham.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.]

Declaratively.

ENVOY. n. f. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle then hated against the Romans. Shakspere.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at every gate,
At every passage to the tenes wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;

Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

TO ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; in- videre, Latin.]

ENV

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Prov.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.
Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakespeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

TO ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity; with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his due price only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakespeare.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts
he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

ENVY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shakespeare.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtuous and superior genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakespeare.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shew'd unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

TO ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n
Pereore, behind thee, and on every hand
Enwheel thee round. Othello.

TO ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,
This luckless chind, whom thus ye see with blood Spurser.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd in me. Shakespeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Atrick niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May 't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? De Witt.

EPH

EPHLELE. n. f. [from Æolus and pila.]

A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe: which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying around under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an ephlele, or a hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the sun warms, and turns into vapours, and wind. Burnet

ΕΡΑ'CT. n. f. [ἐρακτός.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an intire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Hollar on Time.

ΕΡΑ'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from épaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidewalk made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillon, or mafs of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.

EPI

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light, Both month, and day, and hour, he miscalcul'd right;

And told more truly than the ephemeris;

For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden.

ΕΡΗ'MERIST. n. f. [from ephemeris.]

One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was disouting of and flighting the art of foolish astrologers, and generalising ephemeris lists; that pry into the horoscope of activities. Hawell.

ΕΡΗ'MERON-WORM. n. f. [from ἐρημηνιον and worm.]

A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephermon-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

Ε'RHOD. n. f. [ἐρῳδός.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests.

The ephol worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephol crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breastplate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraven on them, one on each stone. The ephol worn by the other priests were of plain linen.

He made the ephol of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exodus.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few As are those pearls of morning dew, Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sanctus.

Ε'PIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἐπικός.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroic, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song, While music numbers, or while verse has rest. Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the history for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and tale which we call epic. Brown.

Ε'PIC'NUM. n. f. [ἐπικόνιον.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from at once shall hear each day One dirge dispatch'd unto your lay; Thine, your own antients, shall become Your living epic tum. Sanctus's Paraphrase.

Ε'PICURE. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes, And mingle with the English epicures. Shakspeare.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his misters, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

Ε'PICUREAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts, Keep his brain turning; epicurean cooks, Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shakspeare.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this? Shakspeare.

Ε'PICURISM. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Herd you do keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold, That this our court, infected with their manners, Shews like a riotous inn; epicurean and lust Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakspeare.

EPI

There is not half so much epicureism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a breeding lane at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the great evil of epicureism. Calany's Sermon.

Το Ε'PICUR'IZE. v. a. [from Epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

While I could see thee full of eager pain My greedy eyes epicureiz'd on thine. Flatman.

Ε'PICY'CLE. n. f. [ἐπί and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, which it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Find the sphere With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er; Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milner.

Ε'PICY'CLOID. n. f. [ἐπικυκλίδος.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

Ε'PIDE'MICAL. } adj. [ἐπιδεμικός.]

Ε'PIDE'MICK. } adj. [ἐπιδεμικός.] 1. That falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predominate of heat. Bacon's History.

As the proportion of epidemic diseases shows the aptness of the air to favour and vehement impressions, the chronological diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Grew.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who thus are exceptions. Say.

He ought to have been huffed in his own minority, or in other amusements equally foolish and epidemic among persons of honour. Say.

3. General; universal. Not used, not proper.

They're citizens of the world, they're all in all, Scotland's a nation epidemic. Scott.

Ε'PIDE'RMIS. n. f. [ἐπίδερμις.] The skin of a man's body.

Ε'PIGRAM. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of watercresses cannot but meet out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a farce or an epigram? Shakspeare.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicotinus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands? Peacock on Poetry.

I write An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glazes not; and is stately without ambrosia.

Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatic turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those most embellishments of Tasso.

Addison.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.]

One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jilt upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigram cast in its face, and been afterwards gravely underlaid by some painful collection.

Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the richest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden cask.

Peacham.

Ditt.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [from επιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with too great violence that the mind cannot restrain them.

Quincy.

My lord is full into an epilepsy.

This is the second fit.

My lord is full into an epilepsy. This is the second fit. My lord is full into an epilepsy. This is the second fit.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon you epileptic village!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Shakespeare.

I epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air undisturbed with any dreams, even such as are very bright.

Abbotson on Pity.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [from epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to avoid a mistake they do use good bushes, and good poems prove the better by the help of good epilogues.

Shakespeare.

Are you mad, you dog?

I am to life and speak the epilogue.

Dryden.

EPINYCTIS. n. f. [from ἐπινύκτις.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinychia is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain.

Wise man's Surgery.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [from ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was.

Ditt.

EPIPHONEMA. n. f. [from ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the aisle; who, if they be sincere, are probably groan at the sound.

Swift.

EPI

EPIPHORA. n. f. [from ἐπιφορά.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eye.

EQUATOR. n. f. [equator, Latin.] The equator on the earth or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bustling stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [equus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It arriveth not achacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb, was about the vernal equinox. Ray.

'Tis now the month in which the world began;
If March beheld the first created man;
And since the vernal equinox, the sun
In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryd.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as the other. Shakespeare.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.
The passage yet was good, the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Escuage, that is service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 150. per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that centus equis is 400 revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services.

ES'CULENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.]

Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great whisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlic.

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no; a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also. Watts.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;
Another faith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. Morley's Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends; as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Burton.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncombined is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at Scented tops and tawdry courtiers. Addison.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

EST

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to the amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general
Than courage. Drum m's Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke
2. To calculate; to compute.
ESTIMATE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Computation; calculation.
Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height altogether Miles. Hutton's
 2. Value.
I'd love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's treasure,
The treasure of my loins. Shakespeare
 3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.
The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. Edmund Spenser Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison's Spectator
 - ESTIMATION. n. f. [from estimate.]

ESTRE'PEMENT. n. f. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowell.

ESTRICH. n. f. [commonly written ostrich; Struthiocamelus.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,

Is to be frighted out of fear: and, in that mood, The dove will peck the ostridge. Shakspere.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes His glorious train; nor ostrich her rare plumes. Sundys.

ESTUANCE. n. f. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober intemperance, and regulated estruance from wine. Brown.

ESTUARY. n. f. [estuarium, Lat.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

E T E

words et cetera, which signifies, and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the

lead, will, by running over the strucken out lines with a stiff, impress the exact

deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for etch]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forward toward one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without flitting of fides, or a least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH. n. f. A country word of which

I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ETERNAL. adj. [eternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Deuter.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

E T E

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.

—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakspere.

I with two fair gifts

Created him endow'd; with happiness, And immortality; that fondly lost, This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name, That co'et in the immortal book of fame, To be eternized, that fame to haunt. Fairy Queen.

I might relate of thousands, and their names, Eternize here on earth: but those elect, Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n, Seek not the praise of men. Milton.

E T H

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love.

ETHER. n. f. [ether, Latin; αιθερ.]

1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.

2. The matter of the highest regions above. There holds of light and liquid ether flow, Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether. Man feels me, when I press th' etherial plains.

2. Celestial; heavenly. Go, heav'nly guest, etherial messenger, Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore. Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n, Ethereal virtues.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the etherial happiness and employment.

Vast chain of beings, which from God begin, Nature's etherial, human; angel, man.

ETYMOLOGICAL. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation.

ETYMOLOGIST. n. f. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

ETYMOLOGY. n. f. [etymologia, Latin; ητυμογια and αιτυμολογια.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colligation of the body, which acceptance its etymology implies.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and confine them by dictionary, is wretchedly etymological.

Pelvis is used by comic writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelviders will signify a lady who looks in her glass.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

ETYMON. n. f. [ητυμον.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blau; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue.

Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stern,
And, in a word, ye even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakespeare.

It is not much that a good man ventures;
as this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unpeppering and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery.
Tillotson.

He might even as well have employed his time,
as some princes have done, in catching moles.
Atterbury.

Evenhanded justice

Returns th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. Shaksp. and's Macbeth

EVENING. n. s. [even, Saxon; avend, Dutch.] The close of the day; the beginning of night.

I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more. Shakespeare.

The devil is now more libidinous than ever, the long day of mankind drawing towards an evening, and the world's tragedy and time near at an end.
Raleigh's History.

Mean time the sun descended from the skies,
And the bright evening star began to rise.
Dryden's Fanti.

It was the sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day. Watts.

EVENLY. adv. [from even.]

1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.

In an infinite chaos nothing could be formed;
no particles could convene by mutual attraction;
for every one there must have infinite matter around it, and therefore must rest for ever, being evenly balanced between infinite attractions.
Bentley.

2. Levelly; without asperities.

A path clearness, evenly and smoothly spread;
not over thin and watery, but of a pretty solid consistence. Wotton.

3. Without inclination to either side; in a posture parallel to the horizon; horizontally.

The upper face of the sea is known to be level by nature, and evenly distant from the centre, and waxes deeper and deeper the farther one saileth from the shore. Brewerwood.

4. Impartially; without favour or enmity.

You have a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince; it becometh you to carry yourself wisely and evenly between them both. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

EVENNESS. n. s. [from even.]

1. State of being even.

2. Uniformity; regularity.

The ether most readily yieldeth to the revolutions of the celestial bodies, and the making them with that evenness and celerity is requisite in them all. Greene's Cosmologia Sacra.

3. Equality of surface; levelness.

4. Freedom from inclination to either side;
horizontal position.

A crooked stick is not straightened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between both. Hooker.

5. Impartiality; equal respect.

6. Calmness; freedom from perturbation, equanimity.

Though he appeared to relish these blessings as much as any man, yet he bore the loss of them, when it happened, with great composure and evenness of mind. Atterbury.

EVENSONG. n. s. [even and song.]

1. The form of worship used in the evening.

Thee, 'twan rests of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.
If a man were but of a day's life, it is well
if he last 'till even-song, and then say his curfew;
an hour before the time. Tay.

2. The evening; the close of the day.

He tun'd his notes both even-song and morn.
Dr. L.

EVENTIDE. n. s. [even and tide.] The time of evening.

A swarm of gnats at eventide,
Out of the ferns of Allan do arise,
Their murmuring small trumpets founding wide.
Fairy Queen.

Isaac went out to meditate at the eventide.
Genesis.

EVENT. n. s. [eventus, Latin.]

1. An incident; any thing that happens good or bad.
There is one event to the righteous and to the wicked. Rail.

On heavy times, begetting such events.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

2. The consequence of an action; the conclusion; the upshot.

Two spears from Me. eage's hand were sent,
With equal force but various in th' event;
The first was fix'd in earth, the second stood On the boar's blifted back, and deeply druck his blood. Dry.

To EVENTEAR. v. a. [eventer, Lat.]

To rip up; to open by ripping the bell.

In a boat, when the hunters eventer'd, or opened, I beheld the young ones, with all their parts distinct. Bacon.

EVENFUL. adj. [event and full.] Full of incidents; full of changes of fortune.

Last scene of all,

That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness. Shaksp. As you like it.

disobliged you; and hath made you time a better return, by restoring you your own heart.
Boyle's Seraphick Love.

E'VER. adv. [æppe, Saxon.]

1. At any time.

Men know by this time, if ever they will know, whether it be good or evil which hath been so long retained. Hobbes.

If thou hast that, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean valour, this might shew it. Shakespeare.

You have a master who is as free from the envy of friends, as ever any king was. Bacon.
So few translations deserve praise, that I scarce ever saw any which deserved pardon. Dodd.

The most sensual man that ever was in the world never felt so delicious a pleasure as a clear conscience. Tillotson.

By repeating any idea of any length of time, as of a minute, a year, or an age, as often as we will in our own thoughts, and adding them to one another, without ever coming to the end of such addition, we come by the idea of eternity.
Locke.

3. At all times, always, without end.
God hath had ever, and ever shall have, some church visible upon the earth. Hooker.
I see things may leave long, but not serve ever. Shakespeare.

Riches endless is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Blinded greatness, ever in turmoil,
Still seeking happy life, makes life a toil. Daniel.
There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,

In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. Milton.
The inclinations of the people must ever have a great influence. Temple.

He shall ever love, and always be
The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden.

out of nature, though every thing is altered.

Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Ever since that time Liliander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's lays and critic's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects,
whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and then sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of vands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son:
And there he crown'd, or give him up for ever. A. Philips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell, Collins. Shaks.
I know a lord, who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal look discover
From the fair head for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. At one time, as ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her co-munured,
Un-to the ground the cast her modelt eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bathful blood her snowy cheeks did dye.

Fairy Queen

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them flavellings. L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden

6. In any degree.

Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Cotter on Pride

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be consider'd as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man;
And all the question, wrangle ever so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong? Pope's Essay.

7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation.

As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman.

Shakespeare's Henry 11.

They brake all their bones in plucking ever
they came at the bottom of the den. Daniel.
That purple in your hand, has a twin-brother,
is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden.

As soon as ever the bird is dead,
Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.

The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainder of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Italy.

8. Ever a. [as ever y, that is, even ich or ever each is each one, all.] Any.
This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.

I am old, I am old.

—I love thee better than I love ever a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare.

9. It is often contracted into er.

10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everdaring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained
by the following instances:

EVERBU'BLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.]

Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.
Panting murmurs, fill'd out of her breast,
That ever-bubbling spring. Grassano

EVERBU'RNING. adj. [ever and burning.]

Unextinguished.
His tail was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it taught;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.

Torture without end

Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton

EVERDU'RING. adj. [ever and during.]

Eternal; enduring without end.
Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everdaring
glo'y and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide

Her everdaring gates, harmonious found!
On golden hinges moving. Milton.

EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton

The juice, when in greater plenty than can exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen. Abbot on Plants.

EVERGREEN. n. f. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.

Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Explan.

I find you are against filling an English garden with evergreens. Addison's Spectator.

EVERHO'NOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.] Always held in honour or esteem.

Mentes, an ever-honour'd name, I old High in Ulfes' local list enroll'd. Pope

EVERLASTING. adj. [ever and lasting.]

1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal; eternal.

When we shall meet again, I know not;
Then so our everlasting friendship take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell Collins. Shaks.

The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, has been added. Hammond.

And what a trifle is a moment's breath,
Lest not to lose with everlasting death! Daniel.

2. It is used of past as well as future eter-ernity, though not so properly.

EVERLASTING. n. f. Eternity; eternal duration whether past or future.

Signify everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Psalm.

We are in God through the knowledge which is had of us, and the love which is born towards us, from everlasting. Hooker.

EVERLASTINGLY. adv. [from everlast- ing.] Eternally; without end.

I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more. Shaks.

Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.

EVERLASTINGNESS. n. f. [from ever- lasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

Nothing could make me slower to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run
Since both this lower world's and the sun's sun
Did set. Donne.

EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.]

Living without end; immortal; eternal;
incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glitt'ring bright
With burning flames and everliving fires? F. Queen.

In that life is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity. Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Faught.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving agent. Newton.

EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, ever- more, always, henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It grew'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a nation grave and hoar.

Fairy Queen.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tibbott.

EVEROPEN. adj. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an everopen ear to all our words. Taylor.

EVERPLEASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.]

Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.

little farther for me. S. Jany.

Emulating Sherril's everpleasing shore,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore. Pope.

To EVERSE. v. a. [eversus, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy. Not used.

The foundation of this principle is totally everse'd by the ingenious commentator upon immortal beings. Glavin.

To EVERR. v. a. [everto, Latin.] To destroy; to overthrow.

A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet everred and overturned. Bayly.

EVERWATCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.

He'd settle betwixt us, and mark'd the skies,
Nor could sleepers ever close his eyes. Pope.

EVERY. adj. [In old language everich,

that is, ever each; æpean eale, Saxon.]

Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

He prophecied untill God their necessities, and they their own requests be relieved by of them. Hooker.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them.

The king made this ordinance, that every twelve years there should be set forth two ships. Bacon.
The virtue and force of every of these three is shrewdly allayed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Aristotle has long since observed, how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof for every thing, which we have for some things.

Every one, that has an idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and, joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
And broken lightnings flash from every cloud.

2. EVERY-WHERE. In all places; in each place.

The substance of the body of Christ was not every-where seen, nor did it every-where suffer death; every-where it could not be entombed: it is not every-where now, being exalted into heaven. Hooker.

If I send my son abroad, how is it possible to keep him from vice, which is every-where to be found? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or every-where. Pope.

EVERY-ONE. adj. [ever and young.] Not subject to old age, or decaying; undecaying.

Joy's every-where, unmix'd with pain or fear,
Fill the wide circle of the eternal year. Pope.

EVESDROPPER. n. f. [eves and dropper.] Some mean fellow that skulks about a house in the night to listen.

What makes you listening there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked evens-dropper. Dryden's Spanish Flyer.

But think how becoming your function it is to be disguised like a slave, and an evens-dropper under the women's windows. Dryden.

EVES-TRIGATE. v. a. [evestigo, Latin.] To search out. Dict.

EUGH. n. f. [This word is so written by most writers; but since the original is, Saxon, or Welsh yeuon, more favours the easier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

At the first stretch of both his hands he drew
And almost join'd the horns of the tough eugh.

TO EVICT. v. a. [evincto, Latin.]

1. To dispossess of by a judicial course.

His lands were evicted from him. King James's Declaration.

3. To prove; to evince. Little used.
This nervous fluid has never been discovered in live animals by the senses, however assisted; nor its necessity evinced by any cogent experiments. Cheyne's Phil. Prim.

EVICTOR. n. f. [from evict.]

1. Dispossession or deprivation by a definitive sentence of a court of judicature.
If any of the parties be laid asleep under pretence of a bribe, and the other party doth cautiously get the fiat at common law, yet the prior court will set back all things, and no subject had to evict or dispossess him. Bacon.

2. Proof; evidence; certain testimony.

A plurality of voices carries the question, in all our debates, but rather as an expedient for peace than an assertion of the right. L'Estrange.

EVIDENCE. n. f. [French.]

1. The state of being evident; clearness; indubitable certainty; notoriety.

2. Testimony; proof.

I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch. Jeremiah.

Unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof and evidence for every thing which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Cato major, who had borne all the great offices, has left us an evidence, under his own hand, how much he was versed in country affairs. Locke.

They bear evidence to a history in defence of christianity, the truth of which history was their motive to embrace christianity. Addison.

3. Witness; one that gives evidence. In this sense it is sometimes plural: as, the evidence were sworn: but sometimes regularly augmented, as evidences.

To swear by law three inches through a door, As Asiatic evidences swore. Dryden's Juvenal.

There are books extant, which they must needs allow of as proper evidence; even the mighty volumes of visible nature, and the everlasting tables of right reason. Bentley.

Thou greater still, must these excel. Prior.

To EXCE'L. v. n. To have good qualities in a great degree; to be eminent; to be great.

Then to Silvia let us sing,

That Silvia is excelling. Shakespeare.

Reuben, unstable as water, thou shalt not excel. Genesis.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is the more intelligent; but there is no less required, courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury: so fitness to govern is a perplexed business. Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon's Holy Wars.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing: those to be sought and frequented that excel in some quality or other. Temple.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel:

Of love sung better, and of arms as well. Dryden.

Let those reach others, who themselves excel;

And censure freely, who have written well. Pope.

EX'CELLENCE. } n. f. [excellence, French; excellencia, Latin.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.

Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so extinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like the souls of beasts, mortal and corruptible with their bodies? Hooker.

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.

I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in music. Locke.

4. That in which one excels.

The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections. Addison.

5. Purity; goodness.

She loves him with that excellency,

That angels love good men with. Shakespeare.

The fire may resolve some of the more spirituous and exhaleable parts, whereof distillation has shewn me that alabaster is not destitute, into vapours. Boyle.

EXHALATION. n. f. [exhalatio, Latin.]

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.

2. The state of evaporating, or flying out in vapours; evaporation.

3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No natural exhalation in the sky, No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day, But they would pluck away its natural cause, And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shakspeare.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.

A fabrick huge

Rose like an exhalation with the sound Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton. It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within the mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burnet.

The growing towers like exhalations rise, And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

To EXHALE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

Yon light is not daylight, I know it well; It is some meteor that the sun exhales, To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shakspeare. I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple. Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat, Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native fear. Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh! Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity! For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells! Shakspeare.

EXHALEMENT. n. f. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, though it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown.

To EXHAUST. v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Baron. Spermatick matter of a vitious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and deprives the flower of it to the feminal vessels. Wise man's Surgery.

2. To draw out totally; to draw until nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures; they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

The nursing grove Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth; But when the alien compost is exhaust, Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

EXHAUSTION. n. f. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHAUSTLESS. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everdure stores Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden stores, Through gulphs immense of intervening air, Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackm.

To EXHIBIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Latin.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

EXH

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street. Shakspeare.
He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.
He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us. Shakspeare.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematic demonstrations?
Græv's Cosmologia Sacra

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave his disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shakspeare.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shakspeare.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitivè or representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

To EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Latin.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Natural Hist.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits, had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made us, was now exhal'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let them thank
Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts Exhilarates their languid minds within The golden mean confin'd. Ph. Lips.

EXHILARATION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gayety.

2. The state of being enlivened.
Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy,
though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon

To EXHORT. v. a. [exhorter, Latin.]

To incite by words to any good action.
We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so you would abound. Thyrs.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Defining or exhorting glances w. r. Milton.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, till we are weary that no room shall be left what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Attiebury.

EXI

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shakspeare.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHORTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

To EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccate.] Aridification; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exsiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterb.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies addis and dexterity. Brown.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry.

Shakspeare uses it for any extremity. Hammer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakspeare.

EXIGUITY. n. f. [exiguitas, Lat.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

Their subordinate and exiguous dose are consumed and exhaled in less than two hours time. Harvey.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

EXI

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since tny exile. Shakspeare.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakspeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaving, pent to linger
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon's Natural History.

To EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our evil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakspeare.

Foul subornation is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' laud. Shakspeare.

For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakspeare.

They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisdom.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd;
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fill'd. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expell'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXILEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzosborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Hutton.

EXILITION. n. f. [exilitio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt will not take fire with noise or exilition; and powder which is made of impure and gleasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies called ephemeræ, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its copiousness; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtilty are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Di.

EXINATION. n. f. [eximatio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his examination. Decey of Piety.

To EXIST. v. n. [existo, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

EXO

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

One year is past, a different scene!
No farther mention of the dean:
Who now, alas, no more is mist
Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXISTENCE. } n. f. [existentia, low Lat.]
EXISTENCY. } State of being; actual possession of being.

N^or is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existency, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point. Addison's Cato.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity denoteth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent. Dryden.

EXISTIMATION. n. f. [existimatio, Latin.]

1. Opinion.
2. Esteem.

EXIT. n. f. [exit, Latin.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.
2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts. Shakespeare.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where. Glanville.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodward.

EXITIAL. } adj. [exitialis, Latin.] De-

EXITIOUS. } structive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not in use.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthrax, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential. Harvey.

EXODUS. } n. f. [ἔξοδος.] Departure;

EXODY. } journey from a place: the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exody at least. Hale.

EXORBITANCY. } n. f. [from exorbitant.]

1. The act of going out of the track prescribed.
2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

I see some of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue. Government of the Tongue.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government. Swift on the Diffusions in Athens and Rome.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,
Unbounded in exorbitance of ill. Garth.

EXORBITANT. adj. [ex and orbita, Lat.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track.
2. Deviation from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions. L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly these exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe. Woodward.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually injured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for. Hooker.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories. Addis.
So endless are exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.

TO EXORBITATE. v. a. [ex and orbita, Latin.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn. Bentley.

TO EXORCISE. v. a. [exorcizo, Latin.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.
2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.

3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fly're, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls. Dryden.

EXORCISER. n. f. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

EXORCISM. n. f. [ἔξορκισμος.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcism? Shakespeare.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms. Harvey.

EXORCIST. n. f. [ἔξορκιστής.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits. Acts.

2. An enchanter; a conjuror. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!

Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Shakespeare.

Is there no exorcist

Reguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see? Shakespeare.

EXORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Nor will I thee detain

With poets' fictions, nor oppress thy ear

With circumstance, and long exordium here. May's Virgil.

I have been distast'd at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums. Addison.

EXORNATION. n. f. [exornatio, Latin.]

Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

Hyperbolic exornations and elegancies many

EXOSSATED. adj. [exossatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones. Diä.

EXOSTOSIS. n. f. [ἔξ and ὄστος.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXOSSEROUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.]

Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes,

as also in snails and soft exossous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXOTICK. adj. [ἑξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestic.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Hooker's Elements of Speech.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Baileyn's Calendar.

EXOTICK. n. f. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit,

which was barren, and produced, on some spots,

EXP

plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exotics. Alfred's Guard.

To EXPAND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To ~~be~~ lay open as a net or sheet;
2. To ~~be~~ spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchymist to propagate and expand itself. Howell.

Belshazzar's horse flamed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Abbotson on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name Expanded flies and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPANSIVE. n. f. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issue from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then flood unmov'd,
Pure as the expansive of heav'n. Milton.

Bright as the ethereal glows the green expansive. San age.

On the smooth expansive of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stir'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f. [from expansible.]

Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be like in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Greco.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Lat.]

Capable to be extended; capable to be spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Greco.

EXPANSION. n. f. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The early expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Greco.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible man. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expands this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would soon ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

5. EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The expansive or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Edy on the Creation.

EXP

The expansive atmosphere is cram'd with cold. Thomson.

To EXPATRIATE. v. n. [expatrio, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatriate in. Alfred's Spectator.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatriate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

'Tis a noble deed o'er all this tinsel of man,
A mighty march! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wanderer tiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,
And with delight, and expatriate sound. Pope.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They lost a custom of obliging the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatriates upon this custom. Bio me.

3. To let loose; to allow to range.

This sense, which is active, is very improper. Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford an ample field of matter wherein to expatriate itself. Dryden.

To EXPECT. v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

We expected

Immediate dissolution. Milton.

Needs must the serpent now his capital route Expect with mortal pain. Milton.

Good with bad

Expect to hear, supernal voice contending

With insinuations of man. Milton.

Ever, now expect great tidings. Milton.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards,

By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect

Thence motion. Milton.

With expecting there the queen, he rais'd

His wond'ring eyes, and toad the temple gaz'd. Dryden.

To EXPECT. v. n. To wait; to stay.

Eliza had expected till Job had spoken. Job.

EXPECTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from us; for being but water coarcted, it can never make good such qualities. Brown.

EXPECTANCE. n. f. [from expect.]

EXPECTANCY. n. f. [from expect.]

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy.

Of more arrivance. Shakespeare's Othello.

Enys have you petulency,

Or else sail upon the morn;

Your expectancy is too soon.

For before the second cock

Crow, the gates will not unlock. Ben Jonson.

This blessed expectancy must be now my trumpet.

But by, my wand'ring muse, how thou dost slay!

Expectancy calls thee now in other way. Milton.

2. Something expected.

There is expectancy here from both the sides,

What further you will do. Shakespeare.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Of that a public mind is here withdrawn!

The expectancy and role of the fair state. Shakespeare.

EXPECTANT. adj. [French.] Waiting expectation.

He hath offered concessions in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant party. Swift.

EXP

EXPECTANT. n. f. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependence by his hopes.

Fancy, vain expectants of the bridal hour,

My throes in various expence devour. Pope.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments; or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n. f. [expectatio, Lat.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees

Should have borne men, and expectation faint

Longing for what it had not. Shakespeare.

The rest,

That are within the note of expectation,

Already are in the court. Shakespeare's Macb.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing near.

Chaucer.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of this day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Shakespeare's Sermon.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Isaiah.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from expono, Lat.]

Exponent of a ratio, or proportion between any two numbers, or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in a geometrical progression, beginning from one, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents; and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.]

To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Baron.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandize, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Abraham.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessaries, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the prices of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Latin; exposer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, Pomp;
Festive thyself to feel what wretchedness feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show Heaven's just. Shakespeare's King Lear

Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the ripe period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lull his toils exposed, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryd.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose.
Dryden's Virgil.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend, in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.

Your time and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops began to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him; a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be exposed or read as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine from her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A link wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chafes clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Abraham.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great inequality as to the time of dining. Abraham.

2. Explanation; interpretation. [from expono, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your back, assisted by the bell,
I reached you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakespeare.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most found. Shakespeare.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will give me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged eyes play truant at his tales. Shakespeare.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing vision,
Hare is depicted as a little boy, which is no contemptuous unto the authority of expositors.

The former's confidence is the last exposure of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South's Sermon.

Scholars, those copious exposers of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvas with another; to altercation; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing hint to my tongue. Shakespeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hume.

It is manifest for friends and unarm'd innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with providence, I then might ask. Corson.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes our bleeding patients to accuse High Heaven, and their expostulations use;
Could nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerately in the course of good friendship. Aylmer's Paragon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.]

One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This table is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakespeare.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i'th' way before thee. Shakespeare.

4. The state of being in danger.

To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard haveer rounded in with danger. Shakespeare.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the hoar, in pots, two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Erlyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to show the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech, concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakespeare.

He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. Locke.

These light holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but gradually expounded it; in matters of civil and political government, they did not create powers, but ordered the countries which they inhabited. Rakish.

2. To examine; to lay open; a latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was
And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Dryden.

TO EXPRESS. v. a. [exprime, expressus Latin.]

EXP

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.
So kids and whelps their tigs and dams express,
And to the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.
Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffer'd in the form. Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.
Each skillful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Phœdia and Hippolitus.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.
Less than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.
Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.
In moral ideas we have no sensible mark that resemble them, whereby we can set them down:
we have nothing but words to express them by.
Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd.
Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for diets. Pope.
To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteem'd a prophanation. Boomer.

4. To show or make known in any manner.
No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately lets. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare: with the reciprocal pronoun.
Mr. Philips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numbers.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.
Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Racon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a latinism.
Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds; 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben Jonson.
Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRESS. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly alike.
Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.
There hath been some doubt whether containing in scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.
There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation;
but the same may be taken away, if occasion leaves. Hooker.
All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Express truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.
I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. Miles's Divine Dialogues.

EXP

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingfleet.
Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.
They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRESS. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A messenger sent on purpose.
The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.
As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threatening the fate of Rome.
Dryden's Ju. enal.
Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express.
Guliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.
I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.
3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.
They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but they falsify against all logic and common sense. Norris.

EXPRESSIBLE. adj. [from express.]
1. That may be uttered or declared.
They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRESSIO. n. f. [from express.]
1. The act or power of representing any thing.
There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, whereas th a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Holter on Speech.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.
But all expression sometimes gives alloy
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay.
Buckingham.

The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Broomer.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink
by mixture of water. Bacon.
The juices of the leaves are obtain'd by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste.
Abbat on Plants.

EXPRESSIVE. adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And ev'ry tear in lines so mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe, O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live! Tickel.
And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r.
Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgment of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposed others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers.

EXP

EXPRESSIVELY. adv. [from expressive.]
In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from expressive.]
The power of expression, or representation by words.

The mountain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strain'd hard to outdo Lucretius. Adams.

EXPRESSLY. adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end that they may be saved, are either expressly set down in scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker.
Who due cross 'em,
Baring the king's will from his mouth expressly?

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillingfleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRESSURE. n. f. [from express.] Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance.
There is a mystery in the soul of state,
which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expression to. Shakspeare.

2. The form; the likeness represented.
I will drop some obscure epithets of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead,
and complexion, he shall find himself personated.
Shakspeare.

3. The mark; the impression.
And nightly, meadow furie, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compais in a ring:
Th' expression that it bears, given 'let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see.
Shakspeare.

To EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro,
Lat.] To charge upon with reproach;
to impute openly with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRATION. n. f. [from exprobrate.]
Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thrift after money, poured gold into his mouth
after he was dead. Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without com-miseration, is the height of misery. South.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice; the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.

To EXPROPRIATE. v. a. [ex and pro-prius, Latin.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

EXP

EXPUGNATION. n. f. [from expugno, Latin.] To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNATION. n. f. [from expugno.] Conquest; the act of taking by assault.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart d'spense The balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence? Samuel.

Deduct what is but vanity, or drefs,

Or learning's luxury, or idleness,

Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain

More curious pleasure, or ingenious pain:

Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrecent parts

Of all, our wits have created arts:

Then see how little the remaining sum,

Which serve the past, and must the times to come!

Pope.

EXPURGATION. n. f. [from expurgatio, Latin.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation. W. J. man's Surgery.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

EXS

EXPURGATOR. n. f. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator. Lord Digby.

EXPURGATORY. adj. [from expurgatorius, Latin.] Employed in purging away what is noxious; as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the ebullition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXQUISITE. adj. [from exquisitus, Latin.]

1. Far-fought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular. Hooker.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining to great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness. Raleigh's Essays.

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgment, could have fixed their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence. Atkinson.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beast in a more exquisite degree than they are by man, for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atkinson's Sermons.

2. Consummately bad.

With exquisite mischance they have mixed the gall and venom of flattery and contempt. K. Charles.

3. Very sensibly felt.

The scales of the senseless hinder objects from making too painful and exquisite impression on the nerves. Chyvre.

EXQUISITELY. adv. [from exquisite.]

Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits virtual unite themselves, and become stronger. Bacon.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabic, and bought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist. Newton.

The filder the, in Grecian arts unkindly,

Returning rich with plunder from the field,

If cups of silver or of gold be brought,

With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,

To glorious trappings from the plate be turn'd,

And with the glittering spoils his horse adorn'd. Pope.

The poetry of opera is generally as exquisite as the music is good. Johnson on L. et.

EXQUISITENESS. n. f. [from exquisite.]

Nicety; perfection.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness. Boyle.

EXSCRIPT. n. f. [from exscriptum, Latin.] A copy; a writing copied from another.

EXSICCANT. adj. [from exsiccat.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsiccants, as bones. W. J. man.

EXT

TO EXSICCATE. v. a. [from exsicco, Lat.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Great heats and droughts exsiccate and waste the moisture and vegetative nature of the earth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

EXSICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccat.] The act of drying.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or exsiccation of humidity, will be resolved by humectation; as earth, dust, and clay. Brown.

Lords who shall abide it? Psalms.

EXTREME. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by happy footed furies led,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feet by turns the bitter change
Of force extreme, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to thieve in ice
Their soft ethereal sympathy, and there to pine Immovable, inhald, and frozen round
Periods of time; whence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such Whop still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be rated in an extreme, without opposition. Pope.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the ex- trêmes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, than those two remove ones, or, as they are called, extremes do certainly agree. Locke.

EXTREME. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden.

TO EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Lat.]

To disembarass; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

These are beliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricate.]

The act of disentangling; disentangle-
ment.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by trans-mutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.]

External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrin- secal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.
Digby on Bodies.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray.

Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsic.]

From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Graville.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.]

Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsic
adherents. Gow. of the Tongue.

Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself;
but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts's Logic.

And molds and ſtamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

EYESORE. n. f. [eye and ſore.] Something offenſive to the ſight.

Hath the church of Chriſt, from the ſuſtitagining, by a ſecret univerſal inſtinct of God's good ſpirit, always tried itſelf to end neither ſemon, nor almoſt any ſpeech of moment, which hath concern'd matters of God, without ſome ſpecial words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like concluſion of pſalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hobbs.

By, doſt this habit; ſhame to your eſtate,
And eyesore to our ſolemn feſtival. Shakespeare.

As ſoon as the two birds came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having preſently to ſpeak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
 With jubiles advanc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. f. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.]
 The court of justices itinerants; and justices in

E Y R

eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose.
Cowell.

EY'RY. n. f. [from ey an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and

 The eagle, and the hawk,
 On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.
 Some haggard hawk, who had her eyrie high,
 Will pounce'd to fasten, and will wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F

F A B

F A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Sealiger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CIUS. adj. [fabacius, Lat.] Having the nature of a bean. Dist.

FABLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula,
 Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison.

2. A fiction in general.

Troilus, to sing the nine,
 Shew'd plenty from his cart divine;
 But, spite of all those fable-makers,
 He never sow'd upon Almaign acres. Dryden.

Pilladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Sects. Lloyd.

3. A vitious or foolish fiction.
 But refuse profane and old wives fables.
1 Timothy.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet:
 this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lie; a vitious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

F A B

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

TO FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Satan's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
 Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
 Old poets mention fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
 That warring-conquest still desires to rove!
 In Marlboro's camp the goddess knows to dwell.
Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie; a familiar use.
 He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakspeare.

TO FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,
 Or turn this heaven itself into the hell
 Thou fablest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
 Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
 Of fancy damfels met in forest wide,
 By knights. Milton's Par. Lost.

FA'BLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
 Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Ticket.

 forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRICA'TION. n. f. [from fabricate.]
 The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth
 the first rudiments of the human nature.
Hall's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Watson.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

F A C

Still will ye think it strange,
 That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
 Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

 Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses,
 that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.
 From beauty still to beauty ranging,
 In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features;
 look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we let the best face on't we could.
Dryden's Virgil.

Stood and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
 Who can't be silent, and who will not lye;
 To laugh, a rare want of goodness and of grace;
 And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.
 A mist watered the whole face of the ground.
Genesis.

F A C

4. The front or forepart of any thing.
The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezekiel.

5. Visible state of affairs.
He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feasts and dance. Milton.
This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.
Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with
'em;

For such are treasons. Ben Jonson
At the first shock, with blood and powder
flam'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Wallis.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Preference; sight; state of confrontation.
Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Nathan.

I've cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,
To lessen in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot with any face or comeliness, say or do himself?
A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot to necessities brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

Yet 'll had the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Huilius.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson.

9. Distortion of the face.
Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? Shakespeare

FACE TO FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lie,
To face to forge, to scoff, to company. Hub. Fals.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy! Dryden.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain, Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.

TO FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and call about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison on the War.

F A C

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Snoothfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence: commonly with down.

We trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.
Because he walk'd against his will.
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan;
the reverse has on it the Cincus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world. Hope.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The fortification of Solurie is faced with mattle. Addison

Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch. Motm's Husbandry

- FACELESS. adj. [from face.] Being without a face. Bailey.

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.

Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Glanville

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evelyn's Kal.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious. William.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

Milton.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

Since Adam, and his facile comfort Eve

Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Culver.

TO FACILITATE. v. a. [faciliter, Fr.]
To make easy; to free from difficulty;
to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared model for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate the pillage, which did little hurt; but they kill'd many men in the attempt. Chambers.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great security and aid to art, and facilitates the means of execution.

Dryden's Duple.

What produceth a due quantity of an animal's spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbutnot on the

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift

FACILITY. n. f. [facilité, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason faith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such preparation.

As let them come or go with even facility. Shaks.

Priety could not be diverted from this to a more convenient business by any motives of picture facility. Ridley.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of pointing then selves by reading good authors. Dryden's Duple.

F A C

FACINOROUS. adj. [facinora, Lat.]
Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinor- ous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. s. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or supposed, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the act or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied.

Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion.

Manifold fins, though in speculation they may be separable from fact, in reality and fact never fail to attend it.

Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood.

FACTION. n. s. [faction, French; factio,
Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, or easily brought to incorporate.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant, all other stones being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.

FACTOR. n. s. [facteur, Fr. factor,
Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain.

Piercy is but my factor, good my lord,
T' engross up glorious deeds on my behalf.

You all three,
The first sort alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate.

The Scott had good intelligence, having some factor doublets at this man, albeit they did not openly trade.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some fly and venomous factors for the old republican cause.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, facts, and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us be stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that, therefore, they ought to be taken away.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own,
And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand.

or manner of making any thing.

FAULTY. n. s. [faute, French; facul- tas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability; whether corporeal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or of any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things.

F A D

Orators may grieve; for to their faculties
Rather than heads, their faculties abide. Dean.
Reason in man supplies the defect of other fac- ulties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by sense we bring about by stratagem.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end
Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind
And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton.
In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other fac- ulties than we possess at present.

3. Mechanical power.
The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood.

4. A physick.
A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal; by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that being subj. et to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and faulture of memory. Sauth.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN. adj. [reagan, Saxon.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,
Which in her face she often view'd fain. Fanny Q.
My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee,
and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions: as, I was fain to do this, would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to throud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to throud themselves were fain. Spenser.

Whoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hooker.

fainting silly creature. Arbuthnot.

FAINTLY. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts;
Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimmering light;
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it. Shakspeare's King Lear.

An obscure and confused idea represents the

and all falseness or falseness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hammond.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitoroufness.

King Richard might create a perfect guest,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.
Shakespeare's Henry 1v.

F A L

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FALSER. n. f. [from falsely.] A deceiver;
a hypocrite. Obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, parier, does all them remain,
That of such falsers friendship been fain. Spenser's Past.

FALSIFIABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICATION. n. f. [falsification,
French; from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hosker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceeds all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine hon. ur. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent possibility from searching after this ill, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Brownie.

FALSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure so no one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.
Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others that put their claims the worst together. L'Estrange.

TO FALSIFY. v. a. [falsify, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speech, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propounds that to the people of God as scripture, which is in truth no scripture. Hosker.

The Irish hardy used to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.
Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Chubbson.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selmes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate. Kneller's History.

This superadds treachery to all the other president ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Deacy of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rath'd away, his ample shield
Is falsified, and round with jav'lines fill'd. Dryd.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English

F L A

author; though perhaps it may be found in Spem-fer's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there:
why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting to my native tongue? Horace has given us a clue for coining words, figurate fonte calant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:
Machi Ubi ro d'Ambr era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.

Falsify cannot otherwise be turned than by falsify.
for his shield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all his effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure panie-let's writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

TO FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. Swi.

FALSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falshood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are to determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of w.
soever love is owing unto God's truth. Hosker.

Can you on him such falsities intrude?

And as a mortal the most wile delude? Sandy.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their cleanness or appearance to the understanding. Smith.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenian hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the flower of Epicurus, and all easily controllable falsities.
Glammell's Script.

TO FALTER. v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanish; vultar, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pile assistants of each other stand,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd,
The trill-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryden.

He changes, Gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks, declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This cartoon shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shaksp.

He found his legs falter. Wifeman's Surgeon.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want of weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discuss. Locke.

TO FALTER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.

This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Bailey for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, feeds, and out-Mortimer's Husbandry.

FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsell; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakspeare
They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Synologia

- FA'MOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

- FAN. n. f. [varanus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With pearls, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this brav'ry. Shakespeare.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with restless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force to live;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or falsely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives cheeks to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.
The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to show him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange

She was fanned into slumbers by cool slaves. Spenser.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakspeare's Coriol.
The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solicit the woods, and spread their printed wings.
Till even. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fanning wind upon the bosom blows;
To insect the fanning wind the bosom robs:

FAN

The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cym. and Iphig.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,

And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collect'd me few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms
Not to the wicked; but as chaff, which fann'd,
The wind drives, to the wicked shall not stand in judgment. Milton.

- FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church wrote doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; his triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their flanders and calumnies. Rogers.

- FANATIC. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastic; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Ofus, Ius, Ous, and tunc tunc,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods, disgorg'd in blouth forms. Milton.

- FANATIC. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double amature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon fought up by a fanatic. Deacy of Percy.

- FANCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fan-fanc men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Wentworth's Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he lay in his superstitious buildings; and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward

It would show as much singularity to deny that,
as it does a fanciful faculty to affirm it. Guthrie.

- FANCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

- FANCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

A bittus Magnus, with some what too much curiosity, was somewhat transfused with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

- FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; phantasia, Greek.] It should be phantasy.

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representation of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakspeare, fancy's sweetest child!
Warble his native woodland wild. Milton.

Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses present,
She forms imaginations, any shapes,

FAN

Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton.

Though no evidence affects the fan y lo strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to tear from joy to doubt;

Whom we now a godd's call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Sirait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and heat are fancy all. Graville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A portion of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturb'd by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.
I have always had a fancy, that I might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Scatation is very new, and built with a pretty fan y. Adelphi.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of foolish fancies your companion making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Shakespeare.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to t'aveiling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To do till, of to a vow of single life. Shakespeare.
A resemblance in humour of opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?
It is engender'd in the eye;
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakespeare.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.
The Sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Belsham.

One that was just entering upon a long journey took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The salt taste of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any colour, aromatic, or medicinal substance, are but fancy
the cause is, for that those things have possessed then period, and count not. Bacon's Natural History.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for bankers. Mortimer.

- To FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so; all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spratt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no further than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginings furnish us with. Locke.

- To FANCY. v. a.

FAN

FAN n. f. [from the verb.]
1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;

Who might'st thought can clothe with manly dress
He whom I fancy, but can never express.
Dryden's Juvenal

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty fancied her so strongly, as neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demoldish this town in whatever manner she pleases to fancy.
Rowley

FANCY-MONGER n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forests, that abuses our young plants with carving Roland on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on Brambles; all, forsooth, desiring the name of Roland. If I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him (I me good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

FANCYSICK adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound, one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that make men miserable; and when we come to be fancy-sick, there's no cure.
Shakespeare

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bid to open wide his bawny gear.
Spenser

FANE n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Lat.]
A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word

Not fane nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embellishments all of ours, shall lift up
Their not in privilege.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus
Old Calphe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now the fane's d.
Dryden's Æneid
Yet fane to fane repair'd, and humble rites,
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fane d' gods,
Who with their votaries in one room shad.

*A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb*
Philips

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious
swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.
Pope

FANFARON n. f. [French from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage]

1. A bully; a hector.

Venus makes Æneid a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector.
Dryden

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or dispute as those that are least able to go through with it.
Johnson

FANFARON'DE n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur B. uillems.
Swift

TO FANG v. a. [fan an, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To fang is yet used in Devonshire.

Destruction fang mankind!
Shakspeare's Timon

FAN

FANG n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held;
any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The serpent's difference; is the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I mutter and say
This is no flattery. Shakespeare's As you like it

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, talmons, and dogs, though less.
Bacon

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain The bulk; the bulk, improp'ly, falls headlong on the plain.
Dryden

Then charges, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and: stooping from your horse, Rivets the point to the ground. Addison

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The potent fangs of the yuca are to be erect'd like the tuberoses.
Evelyn's Kuhn-ur

FANGED adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,
They be in the mandate. Shakespeare's Hamlet
Not Scythians, nor fierce Dolans, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.
Philips's Briton

FANCLE n. f. [from fencan, Sax.
to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely but in contempt with the epithet new: as, new fangles, new fangleness.

FANGLED adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned;
dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant. Ascham

A book of old, rare one!
Be not, as in this fang'd world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers. Shakespeare's Cymbeline

FANGLESS adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rids
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangleless hound,
May offer, but not hold. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FANGOR n. f. A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters.
DiA.

FANNELED n. f. [funon, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mas-priest when he officiates. DiA.

FANNER n. f. [from fan] One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan
her. Jeremiah

FANTASTED adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or imaginations.

As I travel'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantastied. Shakspeare

FAN

FANTASM n. f. [See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTASTICAL adj. [fantastique, Fr.
FANTASTICK. } from fantasy.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preter-natural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of. South

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose mother yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my fragile state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakespeare's Macbeth

Men are so possess'd with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arriv'd to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastical ideas of a busy imagination. Dodley of Vity

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

As ye fancy it, or it is indeed
Which outwits ye then? Shakespeare

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Not happy, and not very true,
From out turn of a fan of the wheel. Prior

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

I lay put such words in the mouths of one of the fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call him. Sidney

Put it up in filken things,
With' two yord conceited true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth
Of greater time than I. Shakespeare

Dumvir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick mistress; to whom he refers from the conversation of a discreet and affectate wife. Tuttle

We are apt to think your metallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon them coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed. Addison

FANTASTICALLY adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination

2. Capriciously; humorously; unitea-dily.

England is fondly sing'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, greedy, unwise, humours youth,
That she can't see her own. Shakespeare

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One can't so much as fantasically chafe, even or old, to think out way. Johnson

FANTASTICALNESS n. f. [from fan-tastick ss. } from fantasy.]

1. Humorouleness; mere complaisance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I have not offence to get to you, but him out of countenance, by having convinced him of a fantastickness. Johnson, Pref.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FANTASY n. f. [fantasie, French;
phantasy, Latin.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY

How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale!

Is not this something more than fantasy? Shakspeare

F A R

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy:
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconsubstantial than the wind.
He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.
Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere the sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep the as found as careless infancy.
These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the fug'ly sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the propriety to your fantasies and affections.

FANTOM. n. f. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakspeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered.

FAR. adv. [peon, Saxon; fatt, Erse.]

To a little riv'let I prefer.

With costly eates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord;
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far-fam'd mistress of mankind.

From the same lineage stern Aetæa came,
The far-fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be faithful for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Is it far you ride?
As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who sought his destiny.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known, following not far after himself with all his army.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine.

F A R

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away.

Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Far off you view them with a longing eye
Upon the topmast branch.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find the quite contrary.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country in the western world.

5. To a distance.

As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.

Neither did those that were sent, and travel'd far off, undertake to difficult enterprises without a conductor.

But all in vain I which when he saw, he ceased
Contending, and remov'd his tents far off.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well pois'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.

In a great part.
When they were by Jesus the day was far spent.

In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the world.

The face of war
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Latin is a more far distinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the ploughn.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care.

To a great height; magnificently.
This is perhaps only in Shakspeare.

So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir.

To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself.

F A R

How far forth you do like their articles.

Not to resolve, is to resolve: and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth it far in some other sort, as to resolve.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it.

The custom of these tongues sometimes far influences the expressions, that in these epistles may observe the force of the Hebrew conceptions.

At a great distance.
For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore.

To a great distance.
Cherubic watch, and of a fowrd the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to flight
And guard all passage to the tree of life.

Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

Far is used often in composition; as, far-shooting, far-fetching.

FAR-FETCH. n. f. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But far fetches have deeper reaches,
In all their politic far-fetches;
And from their Coptic priest, Kucherus,
Found out this mystick way to jester us.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

Brought from places remote.
Of little things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the far-fetch'd spoil.

By his command we boldly cross the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars misfire.
We trac'd the far-fetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which birth'd our fathers made our prize.

Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his far-fetch'd policy.
For far-fetch'd thymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.]

Striking, or penetrating a great way.
Atlas, her sire, to whose far-piercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded he;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault and prop the spheres.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.]

Shooting to a great distance.
Then loud he call'd Aeneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Aeneas came;

Presents that beauty. Waller

So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd, Oppress'd by those who strive to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

So fares the flag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruist and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them to oppose. Hudib.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden's Æneid

So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand hands itself well warmed and cover'd, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, 'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fares sumptuously every day. Luke.

Feed your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so hardly, as on the trumpet's sound. Shakspere's Timon.

Men think they have far'd hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs: but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarlish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarlish. Jonah.

He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryden's Farnel.

2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.

But come, to well refresh'd, now let us pray,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their summer's fare. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise;

F A R

But since among mankind to few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden's Juvenal.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.

FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonum rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time, use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell king: with thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shakspere's King Lear.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shaksp.
Be not amaz'd, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakspere.

An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden.
Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but he replied farewell. Dryden.

O queen, farewell! he still possess
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest! Pope's Odyssey.

See now the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shakspere's Henry IV.

If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of the subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spekator.

FARINACEOUS. adj. [from farina, Lat.]

He dreamt of it, to prosper best.

Behold the destin'd place of your abodes;

For thus Aeschylus prophesy'd of old,

And thus our fatal place of rest foretold.

Dryden's Æneid.

O race divine;
For beauty still is fatal to the line.

Dryden.

FATALIST. n. f. [from fate.] One who maintains that all things happen by inevitable necessity.

Will the whitinate fatalists find sufficient apology?

Watts.

FATALITY. n. f. [fatalité, French; from fatal.]

1. Predetermination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The Stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter.

South.

2. Decree of fate.

By a strange fatality men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present vogue.

Krug Charles.

All the father's precaution could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion.

L'Estrange.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixy-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality.

Brown.

FATALLY. adv. [from fatal.]

1. Mortally; destructively, even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure and clear,
That had the self-enamour'd youth gaz'd here,
So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
While he the bottom, not his face, had seen.

Denham.

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow,
When fatal's their virtue they approve;
Cheerful in flames, and martyrs of their love.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

2. By the decree of fate; by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms compos'd the world mechanically and fatally; only they were not sensible of it.

Bentley.

FATALNESS. n. f. [from fatal.] Inevincible necessity.

FATE. n. f. [fatum, Latin.]

1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

FAT

Necessity or chance
Approach not me; and what I will is fate.

Milton.

There is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate.

Dryden.

You must obey me soon or late;

Why will you vainly struggle with your fate.

Dryden.

When empire in its childhood first appears,

A watchful fate oversees its rising years.

Random chance, or willful fate

Guides the thift from Cupid's bow.

2. Event predertained.

Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?

By water shall he die, and take his end.

3. Death; destruction.

Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late

A chapel crown'd, 'till in the common fate

Th' adjoining abbey fell.

Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;

Feeds long'ting death, but looking not he dies:

Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,

Wasting at once his life and his estate.

Courage uncertain dangers may abate;

But who can bear th' approach of certain fate?

The whizzing arrow sings,

And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings.

4. Cause of death.

With full force his deadly bow he bent,

And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent.

Dryden.

FATED. adj. [from fate.]

1. Deceiv'd by fate.

She fled her father's rage, and with a train,
Driv'n by the southern blasts, was fated here to reign.

Dryden.

2. Modelled in any manner by fate.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related.

3. Endued with any quality by fate. The stricture used by Dryden is unusual.

Bright Vulcanian arms,
Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms,
Suspended shone on high.

4. Invested with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakespeare.

The fated sky

Gives us free scope.

Shakespeare.

FATHER. n. f. [fæðer, Saxon. This word is found likewise in the Persian language.]

1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.

Father is a notion superinduced to the substance or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind.

Son of Ben-salem, thy father saith it: the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word.

11. I shall forget

Father and mother, and to his wife adhere.

2. The first ancestor.

It was said

It should not stand in thy posterity;

But that myself shall be the root and father

Of many kings.

3. The appellation of an old man.

A poor blind man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epitom, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change? The old man answered, When such a wicked lawyer as you goeth to heaven.

4. The title of any man reverend for age, learning, and piety.

You shall find one well accompanied

With reverend father's and well learned bishops.

Men of wit
Often father'd what he writ. Swift.
4. To ascribe to any one as his offspring, or production: with on.
And lest we seem to father any thing upon them more than is their own, let them read. Hooker.
My name was made use of by several persons, one of which was pleased to father on me a new set of productions. Swift.
Magical relations comprehend effects derived and father'd upon hidden qualities, whereof, from received grounds of art, no reasons are derived.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- FA'THERHOOD. n. f. [from father.] The character of a father; the authority of a father.
Who can abide, that against their own doctors,
both of the middle and last age, fix whole books should by their fatherhoods of Trent be, under the pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.
We might have had an entire notion of this fatherhood, or fatherly authority. Locke.
